PREFACE

TO

STOKES' ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

THIS book is intended to be a record of fact and not of opinion. It is a reference book to which one may turn for adequate information on any matter connected with music or musicians. It is comprehensive, containing a wider variety and, it is believed, a greater number of topics than any other musical reference work. It includes, for example, definitions of musical terms simply expressed; biographies of all musicians worthy of remembrance; explanations of the theory of music, without technicalities; the stories of all the important operas, beside all the matters usually included in musical encyclopædias. Because of the fact that English-speaking people hear opera in every tongue but their own, the author has made a point of narrating as fully as possible stories of all operas which are generally sung or which are likely to become popular. In this respect the work has unusual value for the layman. Since special stress is laid on achievement, complete lists of the works of the great composers are given. Even in the notes about obscure musicians the titles of some works are included. A list of books for further reading is given at the end of every important article.

American and English musicians, so often neglected in works of this kind, are given their due proportion of space. Respect for the old masters of established reputation has not interfered with just treatment of the younger generation of French and Italians. For the first time in an English reference work special articles are devoted to great national schools such as the Madrid and St. Petersburg Conservatories.

In many matters the author has been compelled to compare, weigh, and analyze all opinions entitled to respect. Wherever he regards a fact as definitely settled he states it without discussion, but where it is impossible to reconcile divergent views he has presented both sides of the question. He has treated every subject in the light of the latest research, presenting material about many subjects not heretofore treated in an encyclopædia of music. It is hoped, therefore, that the work is thoroughly up to date for all purposes.

In order to include hundreds of new subjects while giving adequate treatment to the usual topics, it has been necessary to adopt some method of condensation. Abbreviations have been employed and such useless verbiage as "the time and place of his death are a matter of dispute" has been eliminated. In biographical accounts the name of the person is invariably followed by an active verb leading into that person's achievements. If the dates or other facts are unknown, they are omitted without comment.

This book was written to meet the necessities of students and lovers of music, but it is hoped that professional musicians may find it helpful by reason of its simplicity, compactness, and thorough system of cross-referencing.

Although no work of this kind can be wholly free from error, it is hoped that the efforts that have been made to insure accuracy of statement have been successful. The publishers will welcome the coöperation of all who detect errors, and will be most grateful for corrections or addenda that will make this encyclopædia more accurate and complete.

OF

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

A became the sixth tone of the natural key of C upon the adoption of the modern SCALE in the 16th century and, in International or French PITCH, a' is produced by 435 vibrations per second at the temperature of 59° Fahrenheit. A is likewise the name of the major key having three sharps and of the minor key relative to C. One string is tuned to A in all instruments of the viol family; one clarinet is set in A; hence all instruments in the orchestra are attuned to A, usually sounded by the oboe.

Aaron first introduced Gregorian chant into Germany. A Scotch monk, he became abbot of St. Martin's, Cologne; d. 1052.

Aaron or Aron (Pietro) was first to abandon Latin for the vernacular in writing on counterpoint and musical history; established a music school in Rome under the patronage of Leo X, 1516. His works are listed in "Musik Literatur," Becker, Leipsic, 1836. B. in Florence; canon of Rimini; d. 1533.

Abaco (Baron) composed for 'cello, on which he was a noted amateur performer. B. at Verona; one composition is dated 1748.

Abbé (Philippe and Pierre de St. Sevin) were famous 'cellists at the Opéra, Paris, 18th century, having been music masters previously at the parish church, Agen. Exquisite playing of Pierre is said to have caused the abandonment of the viol da gamba for the 'cello as an orchestral instrument.

Abbé Perrin, Robert Cambert, and the Marquis de Sourdéac were the founders. From the days of Lully, Rameau, and Gluck, the institution has fostered the growth of lyric drama. Accarezzevolmente. It. Caressingly.

Accelerando or Accelerato. It. Increase the speed.

Accent is the regularly recurring special stress by which rhythm is defined. Normally the primary accent is given the first note to the right of the bar. In common time there is a secondary or sub-accent to the third beat, while in compound time lighter accents are given the first of each group of notes. These normal, grammatical, or metrical accents may be reversed, producing what is called SYNCOPATION, a device to which Beethoven often resorted. Stress for poetic or rhetorical effect is given by expression signs or by the words sforzando or tenuto, or by binding an unaccented to an accented chord.

Accentor. Leader of a chorus.

Accentuare. It. To accent.

Accentuation. Emphasizing certain notes.

Accentus Ecclesiasticus. L. The system by which singers chanting church music governed the inflexions of their voices on reaching commas, semicolons, colons, periods, question marks, etc., in unnoted service books. Accessisten. Ger. Volunteer choir singers.

A Chula. Port. Dance resembling the fandango.

Ach Gott vom Himmel. Luther's hymn, a paraphrase on Psalm xi, published in 1524, retains great popularity in Germany, where it is still sung to the melody as given in the Erfurdt Enchiridion. Mozart makes use of that chorale in the finale to the second act of his "Magic Flute."

Acis and Galatea. Handel's pastoral opera or masque, to text by Gay with lyrics by Dryden, Pope, and Hughes, was probably composed at Cannons in 1720, and first performed there the following year. In 1788 Mozart rescored the work for Van Swieten.

A Cinque. Fr. In five parts.

Acoustics is the science which deals with sound and the laws which govern it. When a tuning fork is struck the vibrations of its prongs may be seen and felt. Corresponding vibrations or sound waves are set up in the air, by which they are communicated to the ear, which in turn conveys the sensation of sound to the brain. If the fork be struck violently the AMPLITUDE of VIBRATION and consequently the intensity of the sound will be greater than if struck gently, but until the vibrating prongs have returned to rest the sound waves set in motion will be periodic and of uniform length. If the fork indicate a' of French or International pitch, these sound waves will be propagated at the rate of 435 per second. The essential of sound, by which we have come to mean musical tone as distinguished from mere noise, is regularity of vibration, and whether the sound wave is set in motion by an elastic string as when open A is sounded on the violin; by a reed, as when A is intoned on the oboe; by an enclosed column of air, as in the case of an organ pipe; a given number of vibrations per second will always produce a tone of the same pitch. The quality of a given tone sounded by various instruments or voices shows wonderful variety, however, due the fact that, in addition to the principal tone sounded, which alone is audible under ordinary circumstances, higher and softer tones appropriately called "overtones" or "upper partials" are almost invariably produced, blending with the principal tone and modifying its quality. Thus when an open string is set in vibration it produces a principal tone, high or low, in proportion to its length, size, and tension, but the string divides itself into several vibrating segments, separated by nodes or spots of minimum vibration, and these segments vibrating twice, four, or six times as rapidly as the entire string, produce the harmonics called overtones. Such open pipe instruments as the flute give overtones in the ratios of 1, 2, 3, and 4. The overtones of a closed pipe are in the ratio 1, 3, 5, 7, and this ratio governs in the case of clarinets, which are closed at one end by the mouthpiece. The complete series of overtones are given by brass instruments, and the tones are further modified in quality by the form of the tube, the bell, etc. Computation of the number of vibrations required for a given tone has been made simple and certain by the toothed wheel and the siren, and it has been established that, to the average human ear, appreciation of pitch begins with vibrations of from eight to 32 per second, and ends with 40,000 vibrations per second. The octave of any tone may be obtained by doubling the number of vibrations by which it is produced. Other proportions need not be given here because, with this exception, in equal TEMPERAMENT (whereby the octave is divided into twelve nearly equal semitones) there are no true intervals. In theory the intensity of sound diminishes with the inverse square of the distance from its source, but this loss of the volume of tone is counteracted by the use of sounding boards and resonators. Volume of tone in musical instruments is often magnified in the same manner. A violin string in vibration sounds faint in itself, but the vibrations are communicated to the belly of the instrument by the bridge, and to the back by the sounding board, and the tone is thus made louder. Sound waves travel in air at the rate of 1090 feet per second at 32 F. and between one and two feet faster per second with every additional degree of warmth. They traverse water at the rate of 1435 feet per second, iron at the rate of 5030 feet per second. They may be reflected as light waves are, producing the phenomena of echoes and whispering galleries.

Act. Natural division in the drama was effected by the Greek chorus, but in the time of Horace the Act had come to be one of five divisions of a play, each more or less complete, and with its own climax. Wagner favoured a three-act division in opera, the number generally adhered to in German and Italian operas. There are usually five acts to French classic operas. Instances of one- and two-act operas are to be found, however, in every national school.

Acte de Cadence. Fr. Chords introducing a cadence.

Action. Mechanism affecting strings, pipes, or stops of an instrument, and operated by the keyboard.

Actinophone. An instrument producing sound from actinic rays.

Act Music. Cantatas composed for special occasions at Oxford by professors of music, to words by professors of poetry.

Acton (J. B.) composed vocal music and taught. B. Manchester, 1863.

Adagietto. It. Slightly faster than adagio; a diminutive adagio.

Adagio. It. Very slow; gives name to movements of symphonies, etc.; Assai or Di Molto, extremely slow; Cantabile, in singing style; Patetico, with pathos; Pesante, weightily; Sostenuto, in a sustained manner.

Adam (Adolphe Charles) composed the POSTILION OF LONG-JUMENTAU, the NUREMBURG DOLL, and other comic operas highly successful in their day, taught composition at the Conservatoire, collaborated with his teacher Boieldieu in his DAME BLANCHE, lost a fortune in attempting to establish a Theatre National, composed delightful ballet music, but failed in grand opera. Born in Paris, July 24, 1803, son of LOUIS, a piano teacher at the Conservatoire, he was only permitted to take lessons on promising his father never to write for the stage. He studied organ with Benoist, counterpoint with Eler and Reicha; but so far was he from keeping his early promise that he engaged as triangle player at the Gymnase in order to master the technique of the stage. It was at Boieldieu's suggestion that he devoted himself to comic opera. "Pierre et Catherine," his operetta, was produced at the Opéra Comique, 1829, and the next year, "Danilowa." Other works speedily followed, including "Le Châlet," "Le Brasseur de Preston," "Le Roi d'Yvetot," "Cagliostro," "Richard en Palestine," and the ballets "Faust," "La jolie fille de Gand," and "Giselle." Adam's failure as manager may have been due to the Revolution of 1848, which broke out less than a year after his opening. Africaine. Giacomo Meyerbeer's opera in five acts to text by E. Scribe is one of the latest of that master's works, not having been completed until the year of his death, although begun 1838, and was first performed April 28, 1865, at the Académie, Paris. The protagonist of the work, which is pseudo-historic, is Vasco da Gama, the Portuguese navigator. The curtain rises on the royal council chamber in Lisbon. Donna Inez, who loves Vasco, has been called by her father, Admiral Diego, to hear that her hand had been promised Don Pedro, a counsellor of the king's; and when she has been told that Vasco has perished at sea, she hurries away, with Anna, her maid, just as the council assembles. Vasco unexpectedly appears before the council, describes the wreck at the Cape of Storms, which he alone survived, and begs for a ship in which to continue his explorations. Selika and Nelusko, slaves he has purchased in Africa, are produced as evidence of unknown countries; but they refuse to answer questions; Vasco quarrels with the Grand Inquisitore, and is thrown into the prison of the Inquisition, his slaves with him. Selika, a queen in her own country, is loved by Nelusko, who tries to kill Vasco but is prevented by Selika. She then tells the explorer how her island home can be reached. As Vasco expresses his gratitude, Don Pedro and Inez enter with his pardon. Diego is commissioned to make the exploration Vasco has planned, and the promise of Inez to become his wife was the condition of Vasco's pardon. Inez suspects that Vasco loves Selika, and to prove her suspicion unfounded he presents Selika to her. Nelusko undertakes to serve Don Pedro as pilot, and thus in the third act most of the characters are assembled in the cabin of a ship. Don Alvar warns Pedro that Nelusko is planning treachery, but the warning is not regarded. A typhoon arises. Nelusko turns the vessel toward his native coast, but just then a strange vessel is sighted. Vasco, who has hurried after the fleet commanded by Pedro, knowing the danger of the spot, comes aboard to warn his enemy of his peril, hoping to save Inez. Pedro orders his unfortunate rival to be tied to a mast and shot. Selika threatens unless Vasco's life is spared to kill Inez, but she is overpowered. Just then the tempest breaks, and before they have recovered from the panic it occasions the vessel is overrun by savages. They recognize their queen in Selika, and are restrained with difficulty from murdering the entire crew. The coronation of Selika takes place in the fourth act. The Brahmins demand the lives of the strangers, but to save Vasco, Selika swears he is her husband, a statement which Nelusko, who loves her more than he hates Vasco, confirms. Vasco vows eternal fidelity to her, but hearing the voice of Inez, whom he believed dead, betrays his love for the queen's rival. In the last act Selika has determined to put Inez to death, but relents on learning how she loves Vasco, and directs Nelusko to put Inez and Vasco aboard a ship and send them home. Unable to survive the absence of the man she adores, Selika watches the ship sail away from beneath the shade of the deadly Manzanilla tree, and as Nelusko comes to her she dies, and her faithful servant dies with her. The original cast was: Selika, Marie Saxe, sop.; Inez, Marie Batte, sop.; Anna, con.; Vasco, Naudin, ten.; Nelusko, Faure, bass; Don Pedro, Belval, bass; Don Diego, bass; Don Alvar, bass; High Priest, Obin, bass; Grand Inquisiteur, bass. The scene is laid in Memphis and Thebes in the time of the Pharaohs. Ramfis, High Priest of Isis, tells Radames, the Egyptian general, that the Ethiopians have again broken into revolt, at which the soldier rejoices, for he hopes to lead the army to victory and thus claim as reward Aïda, an Ethiopian captive who has become the companion of Amneris, daughter of Egypt's king. A messenger announces that the Ethiopians are led by their king Amonasro, Ramfis declares that Isis has chosen Radames to defend the country, and the young general is taken to the temple to receive the consecrated arms and invoke the goddess' blessing. In the next act Amneris, by pretending that Radames has been killed in battle, forces Aïda to confess her love, but as she threatens vengeance, the army is heard returning in triumph. As the victors are welcomed, Aïda recognizes among the captives Amonasro, her father, and Ethiopia's king. Amonasro warns her not to betray his rank, and, despite the clamour for their death, Radames obtains Pharaoh's promise that all the prisoners shall live, though Amonasro is to remain in captivity with Aïda. Pharaoh announces that he will reward Radames by giving him Amneris. In the third act, Amonasro, having discovered the mutual love of Radames and Aïda, forces her to learn from Radames the plan of his next campaign. When he has done this, Amonasro discovers himself, and urges Radames to have recourse to flight, the only outcome of the dilemma into which he has been drawn. Radames agrees, but Amneris, who has been praying for the love of Radames in a nearby temple, surprises them, and, although Amonasro and Aïda escape, Radames remains captive to the High Priest. In the final act Radames has been condemned as a traitor, to be burned alive, but Amneris offers to save him if he will renounce Aïda. He refuses, and the scene changes so as to represent not only the hall of judgment, but the vault beneath the altar in which Radames is to be immured. Aïda has managed to hide herself in a recess of the vault, and together she and Radames bid farewell to life. In the temple above, the priests are chanting, priestesses are dancing the sacred rites, and Amneris, who had repented of her jealousy and tried to save Radames when it was too late, utters a prayer for his eternal happiness. The best known musical numbers are: Act I: "Ah Celeste Aïda," Radames, ten.; "Retorna vincitor" and "Numi,pieta," Aïda, sop.; Act II: "Alla pompa," Amneris, con., and Aïda; "Questa assisa," Amonasro, bar.; "Gloria all' Egitto," tutti; Act III: "O cieli azzurri," Aïda; "Rivedrò le foreste," Amonasro; "Fuggiam gli ardori,"

Anthems are required to be sung by the ritual of the Anglican Church at morning and evening prayer by the choir, and consist of selections from the Psalms, other portions of the Scripture, or the Liturgy, set to music for solo voice or voices, with or without organ or instrumental accompaniment. Permission to sing hymns in church was issued by Elizabeth early in her reign, and the anthem is a strictly English development of ecclesiastical music, although the Wechselgesang of the Germans, the Antifona of the Italians, and the Antienne of the French resemble it, having common origin in the MOTET. Full anthems are sung wholly by chorus, with or without organ accompaniment. Verse anthems begin with solo passage or verse. Solo anthems are sung by solo voice, but with chorus at the conclusion, even though only for the "Amen." Full and verse anthems have passages for solo voices, but begin and end with chorus. Instrumental anthems are those accompanied by other instruments than organ. Nearly every English composer and many of other nationalities have tried this form of composition which is, therefore, rich in variety and in treatment, and reflects with peculiar truth the taste of each succeeding generation—even that of the Commonwealth period, when the anthem was reduced to the simplest form of psalm singing.

Naturally she finds the golden key to that door most alluring. Armida, queen and enchantress, has the Crusaders at her feet with the exception of Rinaldo, a valiant knight temporarily in disgrace with his leader, Godfrey of Bouillon, because of another's misdeed. Warned to avoid Armida's snares by his friend Artmidor, Rinaldo, finding himself in a lovely spot, is lulled to sleep by exquisite music, and thus falls into the power of Armida, who wishes to kill him, but instead falls in love with him. Rinaldo is not insensible to her charms, but Godfrey has sent two knights to bring him back to camp. Arne was largely self-taught in music, his father having intended him for the law, entering him at a solicitor's after a course at Eton. He undertook the instruction of his sister, afterwards the celebrated actress, Mrs. Cibber. This enabled her to sing in "Amelia," Lampe's opera, 1732, and it was at her suggestion that Arne wrote new music for Addison's "Rosamond," in which she sang the principal rôle. B. Born at Caen, Jan. 29, 1782, of a Norman family domiciled in Paris; he displayed a genius for music in childhood, composing songs when only eleven. Sent to London by his father to qualify for a business career, he was compelled to return in 1804 by the prospect of war. 'Cello concertos, which he wrote for his friend Lamarre shortly afterwards, introduced him as a promising composer, and when, in 1811, Cherubini heard a performance of "Julie," an opera which he composed for an amateur organization, he volunteered to teach him the technicalities of his profession. "Le séjour militaire," his first opera publicly performed, 1813, proved a complete failure, and it was not until six years later that he mustered courage to try again. "Le Testament" likewise failed, but in 1820 he struck the keynote of success with "La bergère Châtelaine," and formed an alliance with Scribe, the author of the books of all his other operas. Then followed in succession: "Emma," "Leicester," "La neige," "Vendôme en Espagne," with Hérold; "Les trois genres," with Boieldieu; "Le concert à la cour," "Leocadie," "Le Maçon," "Le Timide," "Fiorilla," "La muette de Portici," "La fiancée," "Fra Diavolo," "Le Dieu et la Bayadère," "La marquise de Brinvilliers" (with eight other composers); "Le philtre," "Le serment," "Gustave III," known also as "BALLO IN MASCHERA," "Lestocq," "Le cheval de bronze," "Actéon," "Les chaperons blancs," "L'ambassadrice," "Le domino noir," "Le lac des fées," "Zanetta," "Les DIAMANTS DE LA COURONNE," known in English as "The Crown Diamonds," "Carlo Broschi," "Le duc d'Orlonne," "La part du diable," "La Sirène," "La barcarolle," "Haydée," "L'enfant prodigue," "Zerline," "Marco Spada," "Jenny Bell," "MANON LESCAUT," "Magenta," "La Circassienne," "La fiancée du roi des Garbes," "Le premier jour de bonheur," "La rêve d'amour." "La Muette" (Masaniello), with its stirring pictures of revolt, is said to have provoked the Brussels riots which began with its performance in that city, Aug. 25, 1830. In 1829 Auber was elected to the Académie, and he was honoured by Louis Philippe and Napoleon III. His death, which may have been hastened by the disorders of the Commune, occurred May 13, 1871. B is the seventh tone of the natural scale of C, called H in Germany, where B signifies B flat. B is likewise the name of the major scale having five sharps and of the minor key relative to D major. B was the first tone to be chromatically altered, as in the Hexachordal system there would otherwise have been three consecutive whole degrees followed by the interval of an augmented fourth in the third hexachord. The flattened B was then indicated by the round "Rotundum" B or B molle or Bémol, and the natural B by the square "Quadratum" or "Quadrum" or "Durum" B or Bécarre. During the evolution which resulted in the modern scale the round B and square B came to be used as signs of accidentals before other notes, and thus gave form to these signs as used to-day. B flat is the key wherein most of the clarinets in military band, one clarinet in orchestra, and a large number of the brasses are set.

Bach was the name of a great Thuringian family of musicians which began, so far as music is concerned, with Hans Bach, born at Wechmar about 1561; had its most illustrious representative in Johann Sebastian Bach, and became extinct on the death of his grandson, Friedrich Ernst Wilhelm Bach, Berlin, 1845. A genealogical table prepared by Johann Sebastian and supplemented by his son, Carl Philip Emanuel, sets forth the names of 53 men. Musicians of the Bach family so completely monopolized their art in Arnstadt, Erfurt, and Eisenach that Erfurt town musicians were called Bachs. Veit, assumed to have been the son of HANS, immigrated to Hungary to escape religious persecution, but later returned to Wechmar, where he plied the trades of miller and baker, and in leisure moments played the cythringen, which may have been a kind of zither. B. about 1550; d. Mar. 8, 1619. Hans was the first to become a professional musician, but combined the gentle art with carpet weaving. B. about 1580, son of VEIT; d. Dec. 26, 1626. Johannes became town musician and church organist at Erfurt. B. Nov. 26, 1604, son of HANS; d. 1673. Heinrich served as organist at Arnstadt for more than 50 years beginning 1641. B. Wechmar, Sept. 16, 1615; son of HANS; d. July 10, 1692. Christoph became town musician to Arnstadt and court musician to Count Schwarzburg. B. Wechmar, April 19, 1613; son of HANS; d. Sept. 14, 1661. Georg Christoph composed, taught school and sang at Themar and Schweinfurt. B. Sept. 6, 1642, Erfurt; son of CHRISTOPH; d. April 24, 1679. Johann Christoph and Johann Ambrosius, twin sons of CHRISTOPH, were so much alike as to be hardly distinguishable, even by their wives. Both played violin. Johann Christoph became court musician to Count Schwarzburg at Arnstadt. Two of his sons were musicians. B. Erfurt, Feb. 22, 1645; d. Aug. 25, 1693. Johann Ambrosius joined the Erfurt "Raths-Musikanten" in 1667. He became the father of JOHANN SEBASTIAN, and died Eisenach, 1695. Johann Christoph played organ in Eisenach churches, where he finally became court organist. B. Arnstadt, son of Heinrich, Dec. 8, 1642; d. Mar. 31, 1703. Johann Michael composed 72 fugued and figured chorale preludes, organist at Gehren, near Arnstadt. He was the father of Maria Barbara, 1684-1720, who was the first wife of her cousin, Johann Sebastian. B. Aug. 9, 1648, Arnstadt, son of HEINRICH; d. May, 1694. Johann Christian directed the musical society at Erfurt in succession to his father, JOHANN of Erfurt. B. Aug. 2, 1640; d. 1682. Johann Aegidius became organist of St. Michael's Church, Erfurt, and on the death of his brother, Johann Christian, succeeded him as director. These brief references bring us to the fifth generation of the Bach family, reckoned from Hans of Wechmar, the generation in which the genius of the race culminates in JOHANN SEBASTIAN. Reserving Johann Sebastian for a special article, others fifth in descent from Hans in this period were: Johann Bernhard composed four orchestral suites, preludes, and clavier music, organist at Erfurt, at Magdeburg succeeded Johann Christoph as organist at Eisenach. B. Nov. 23, 1676; son of JOHANN AEGIDIUS; d. June 11, 1749. Johann Christoph succeeded his father, JOHANN AEGIDIUS, at Erfurt. B. Aug. 15, 1685; d. 1717. Johann Christoph became organist at Ohrdruf; pupil of Pachelbel of Erfurt, and brother of Johann Sebastian, to whom he taught clavier. B. June 15, 1671; son of Johann Ambrosius; d. 1721. Johann Nicolaus composed many suites, the comic opera "Der Jenaische Wein und Bier Rufer"; manufactured pianos but met with great opposition because of his introduction of equal temperament; organist to town and University of Jena; composed the cantata for double chorus and orchestra, "Es erhuh sich ein Streit," the motet "Ich lasse dich nicht," well known under the English title "I wrestle and pray," and once attributed to Johann Sebastian. B. 1669; son of Johann Christoph of Eisenach; d. 1753. Johann Ludwig composed 17 church cantatas (Johann Sebastian transcribed 12 of them), a suite in G, chapelmaster at Meiningen. B. Steinbach, 1677; son of Jakob Bach and probably descended from Veit; d. 1741. Of the generation succeeding Johann Sebastian were: Johann Ernest composed sacred music and a clavier fantasia and fugue; graduated in law Leipsic University; studied music under Johann Sebastian; chapelmaster at Weimar, 1756. B. Eisenach, Sept. 1, 1722; son of JOHANN BERNHARD. Wilhelm Friedeman, "the Halle Bach," composed 23 church cantatas and 17 sets of instrumental pieces, regarded as one of the greatest organists and theorists of his time, ruined himself in dissipation and died in want. Eldest son of JOHANN SEBASTIAN, who educated him, he studied at the Thomasschule and won honours in mathematics at Leipsic University. Organist at Dresden, and in 1747 at the Liebfrauenkirche, Halle, he was without regular employment from 1764, when he resigned, to his death, Berlin, 1784. Johann Christoph Friedrich, "the Bückeberg Bach," composed operas, oratorios, and passion music; chapelmaster to Count Schaumberg at Bückeberg. B. Leipsic, June 25, 1732; ninth son of JOHANN SEBASTIAN; d. Jan. 26, 1795. Carl Philip Emanuel, greatest of the sons of Johann Sebastian, is discussed in a special article. Johann Christian, "the Milanese or English Bach," composed the opera "Catone," performed in Milan, 1758; conducted Mrs. Cornely's subscription concerts in London with Abel from 1765 to 1775, when they established their own series, lasting until 1782; taught music to English Royal family; composed the operas "Temistocle," "Adriano in Siria," "Lucio Silla," "La Clemenza di Scipione," and much piano music. B. Leipsic, 1735; 11th son of JOHANN SEBASTIAN; studied in Berlin with his brother C. P. Emanuel; visited Naples, Milan; organist Milan Cathedral, 1760-62; d. London, Jan. 1, 1782. Johann Gottfried Bernhard became organist to the Marienkirche, Mülhausen, 1735, and the following year of the Sangerhausen Jacobikirche. B. May 11, 1715; son of JOHANN SEBASTIAN; d. while studying law at Jena, May 27, 1739. Wilhelm Friedrich Ernst composed "Huldigungs cantata" in honour of the accession of Frederick William II of Prussia, who made him cembalist to the Queen, taught the royal children two generations, assisted with his wife and two daughters at dedication of monument at the Thomasschule, Leipsic, in honour of Johann Sebastian. B. Bückeberg, May 27, 1759; son of JOHANN CHRISTOPH FRIEDRICH, and last of the descendants of the Johann Sebastian Bachs bearing the name; d. Berlin, Dec. 25, 1845.

Bach (Johann Sebastian) composed the Passions according to St. Matthew and St. John, which have caused most works along these lines to be forgotten; organ music in every form which has never been excelled; brought the art of fugue to its highest perfection; established the much debated system of equal temperament with his "Well Tempered Clavier," "Das Wohltemperirte Clavier," which enforced its value by presenting preludes and fugues in every key; revolutionized the technique of keyboard instruments by first bringing into equal play the little finger and thumb; threw his influence in favour of the harmonic system as opposed to the church modes; invented the viola pomposa and the Lauten-clavicymbalum; taught with distinguished success, and composed chamber music in all varieties. Born at Eisenach in Mar., 1685, baptized Mar. 23, the son of Johann Ambrosius Bach and Elizabeth, born Lammerhit; he received violin lessons from his father, but, being left an orphan at the age of ten, went to live with his elder brother, Johann Christoph, organist at Ohrdruf. His brother taught him clavier, but forbade him to touch a manuscript collection of Buxtehude, Froberger, and others, and when the lad managed to copy it by moonlight after six months' labour, so great was his desire for an insight into the best music of his day, took it from him. He had attended the local lyceum, but at 15 he was admitted a free scholar at St. Michael's Lüneburg, because of his lovely soprano voice. There he studied organ with Böhm and made excursions to hear Reinken at Hamburg and to Celle, where the French composers were in fashion. At 18 he joined the band of Prince Johann Ernst at Weimar, and a few months later became organist of the new church at Arnstadt. He walked to Lübeck to hear Buxtehude play the organ, and remained until the church authorities recalled him to Arnstadt. 1707 found him organist of St. Blasius Church, Mülhausen, and Oct. 17 of that year he married his cousin Maria Barbara. Of their seven children only a daughter, Wilhelm Friedemann, and Carl Philip Emanuel survived infancy. In 1708 he became organist to the court of Weimar; in 1714 concertmeister, and then he undertook a series of concert tours. One of these took him to Dresden in 1717 where Marchand, a famous French organist, accepted his challenge to a contest in music, but fled before the appointed time, leaving Bach in possession. The same year he was made chapelmaster to Prince Leopold of Anhalt-Cöthen at 400 thalers per annum, and, while holding this office, produced a quantity of chamber music. Between 1718-20 Bach accompanied the Prince to Carlsbad. During this absence from home his wife died. Bach then applied for the position of organist at the Jacobskirche, Hamburg, but an unknown musician offered 4000 marks for the office—and got it. In 1721 he married Anna Magdalene Wülken, daughter of the Weissenfels court trumpeter. Thirteen children were born of the marriage, of whom only Johann Christoph Friedrich and Johann Christian survived him. The period of Bach's greatest activity began with 1723, when he became cantor at the Thomasschule and organist and music director at the Thomaskirche and Nicolaikirche, Leipsic, where he remained in service 27 years. His duties left him ample time for composition. His Passions and the famous High Mass in B minor were written for the Leipsic churches. He was recognized as one of the leading men of the community and mingled on pleasant terms with the best society. In 1736 he was made honorary chapelmaster to the Elector of Saxony, and in 1747 visited Frederick the Great at Berlin, where his son, C. P. Emanuel, was court cembalist. The king made him test all the pianos and organs, and gave him a theme to work out which, on his return home, Bach developed and dedicated to Frederick as "Musikalisches Opfer." Hard work in copying returned in the failure of Bach's eyes. Two operations failed to restore his vision, but suddenly, July 18, 1750, sight was restored him. Ten days later he died. "Vor deinen Thron tret' ich hiemit," a choral, was completed shortly before his death. Bach's pupils included Altnikol, Ludwig Krebs, Johann Caspar Vogler, Agricola, and Marburg. Despite their admiration, full recognition of Bach's merit as a composer was deferred until Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Chopin blazoned it to the world. His works include Church Cantatas. Bach (Carl Philipp Emanuel) composed concertos, sonatas, instrumental pieces, etc., with such grace and skill that he was for a time deemed the superior of his illustrious father, JOHANN SEBASTIAN; wrote "Versuch über die wahre Art das Clavier zu spielen," setting forth the principles of Johann Sebastian, describing the ornaments employed. This book may be said to have directed the development of modern piano playing. B. Mar. 8, 1714, Weimar, called the "Berlin" or "Hamburg" Bach; educated at Thomasschule; studied law at Leipsic and Frankfurt universities; entered service of Frederick of Prussia, 1738, with whom he remained until 1767, when called to Hamburg in succession to Telemann. Composed oratorios "Die Israeliten in der Wuste," "Die Auferstehung und Himmelfahrt Jesu," 22 Passions, 210 solo pieces. D. 1788.

Bach Choir was organized in London, 1875, for the performance of the High Mass in B minor. Otto Goldschmidt, Sir C. Villiers Stanford, and Dr. H. Walford Davies have been the conductors, and much excellent classic music has been revealed to English ears by it.

Bach Festivals. See MORAVIAN CHOIRS.

Bach Gesellschaft was formed by Schumann, Hauptmann, Otto Jahn, C. F. Becker, aided by Breitkopf & Härtel, and approved by Spohr, Liszt, etc., to publish all authentic works of Johann Sebastian Bach. This excellent purpose was accomplished after 46 annual publications. The "Neue Bach Gesellschaft" was then formed to publish the complete issue in piano score.

Bach Society was formed in London, Oct. 27, 1849, to collect the compositions of J. S. Bach, or books or MS. bearing on his life and work. The collection passed into the custody of the Royal Academy of Music when the society disbanded, Mar. 21, 1870.

Bagpipes were played by the ancient Greeks; were the martial instruments of Roman armies; during the middle ages were common in every part of Europe for religious as well as secular music, but have gradually disappeared with the advance of musical culture in most civilized countries. The characteristics of all bagpipes, whether in remote Asia, where the instrument doubtless originated and is still played, in Calabria or Scotland, are the windchest or bag, the chanter or melody pipe, and the drones or fixed pipes. In all cases the pipes are fitted with reeds. The compass and scale of bagpipes differ with the country of their origin. The modern Irish bagpipe, which is the most perfect and elaborate now in use, has seven finger holes, a thumb hole, and eight keys with a chromatic scale from  $d^7$  to  $d''$  on the chaunter, and four drones. The scale of the Highland bagpipe is neither diatonic nor equal tempered, but rather akin to certain oriental modes.

Born in Dublin, May 15, 1808, son of a dancing master, he composed a polacca for band at seven, gave a violin concert at nine, and wrote a popular ballad; became pupil of Charles Edward Horn in London, 1823; played violin and sometimes led the Drury Lane orchestra; went to Italy under the patronage of Count Mazzara, 1825. "La Pérouse," a ballet written during this period, was favourably received. Then he visited Rossini in Paris, who promised him an appointment as baritone at the Italian Opera, and after lessons from Bordogni, he made a successful debut there in 1827 as Figaro in the "Barber of Seville." "I Rivali di se stessi," his first opera was written in 20 days during an engagement at Palermo, 1829-30. There too he married Lina Rosa, a Hungarian singer. "The Siege of Rochelle," first of his English operas, met with success at Drury Lane, 1835, then came "The Maid of Artois," containing "The Light of Other Days," immortalized by Malibran. He sang, composed, made a fiasco as manager of the Lyceum Theatre, and then went to Paris, where he produced two works at the Opéra Comique. In 1843 he returned to England and produced "Bohemian Girl," which still holds its place in popular affection with German, French, and Italian, as well as with English audiences, and which, expanded to five acts, was performed at the Opéra Comique, Paris, 1869. Balfe died Oct. 20, 1870, at his country place, Rowney Abbey. Ballad meant originally a dance song (It. ballata), but was early applied to the narrative verses, sometimes of interminable length, sung by the Anglo-Saxon "Sceop" or bard, who was generally the author of both words and music. Much of the earliest ballad verse is still extant for the inspection of the curious, but the musical settings have been lost. The subject might be romantic, historical, religious, sentimental, or satirical, and the numerous collections of ballads throw valuable light on the history of the times in which they were written. Henry VIII found a royal diversion in ballad making, but ballads and their makers had fallen into disrepute in Elizabeth's reign, and at present the term is applied to street songs.

Ballade. An indefinite term as applied to instrumental music, although Chopin's preserve the rhythm of 6-4 or 6-8 time.

Ballad Opera. English opera of

Ballerina. It. Ballet dancer.

Ballata. It. A song tune which may be danced.

Ballatetta. It. A little ballata.

Ballet. Fr. Originally a dance song with vocal harmonies, the ballet developed along the lines of the masque, including songs, dances, and a connecting spoken dialogue; but in modern terms ballet means either one of two things—a pantomimic play, telling a complete story by dancing and gesticulation to elaborate musical accompaniment, such as Bayer's "Die Puppenfee" or Delibes' "Coppélia," or the dancing divertissement associated with grand opera. The court ballets at which Louis XIV played guitar, sang, and danced belonged to the earlier or masque type. Ballets exclusively of dancing began with the foundation of the Académie Royal de Musique, at which the courtiers were permitted to take part "without derogation of their nobility." The dramatic ballet is said to have been invented by the Duchess of Maine, and her chapelmaster, Mouret, composed several for the Académie in which the dancing was assigned ladies of title. From the time of Lafontaine, first of professional ballerinas, the ballet has continued to be an indispensable feature in opera at the French capital, although it is usually slighted, if not utterly neglected, in English-speaking countries, and is not regarded as indispensable elsewhere.

Ballo in Maschera. Daniel François Esprit Auber's opera in five acts, to book by Scribe, was first produced at the Académie, Paris, Feb. 27, 1833, and is preferred in Germany to Verdi's opera of the same name, which it inspired. The French version is generally called "Gustave III," the English, "Gustavus III." In the year 1792

Gustavus III, King of Sweden, forms a mutual attachment for the wife of his confidant, Ankarström, who has discovered a plot against the king's life, of which he vainly warns him. Kaulbart, the minister, desires to banish a witch, Arvedson, who is said to compound love philtres, but, unwilling to commit an act of injustice, Gustavus visits the witch in disguise. Malwina, Ankarström's wife, is seeking a potion to release her from her infatuation for Gustavus, and he hears the witch tell her to gather an herb which grows over the graves of criminals, at midnight. When she leaves the witch is required to tell the king's fortune, and warns him he will be slain by the man who next offers him his hand. Just then Ankarström enters, seeking the king, and they shake hands. The lovers meet in the third act, but Ankarström, who has been watching over the king's safety, appears in time to prevent the conspirators from attacking him, gives the king his cloak, and promises to return the veiled lady to her home. The conspirators attack Ankarström, his wife loses her veil, he recognizes her, then turns from her and promises to join the conspiracy. Ankarström's house is the meeting place of the conspirators. Malwina is chosen to draw the lots which shall decide who is to kill Gustavus, and that duty devolves upon her husband. Oswald, the king's page, brings an invitation to a masked ball, and there it is determined Gustavus shall die. The last act represents the ball-room. The king has resolved to abandon his pursuit of Malwina, and has appointed Ankarström Governor of Finland. An anonymous note warns Gustavus not to appear at the ball, but he disregards the warning. Oscar tells Ankarström how to recognize the king, and, as Malwina tries to warn Gustavus and he is handing her Ankarström's commission, Ankarström shoots him. The king pardons his murderer before dying. Giuseppe Verdi's four-act opera, to book adapted by Somma, was completed in 1854 for the San Carlo, Naples, but was declined for political reasons, it being considered unwise to portray the assassination of a king. Verdi thereupon changed the scene from Europe to America, substituting for the king "Count Richard, Governor of Boston." The counsellor Ankarström becomes the secretary "Rene"; Malwina, "Amelia"; the Swedish witch a negro, "Ulrica"; and the chief conspirators become "Samuel" and "Tom." The scene in the witch's den has been somewhat expanded, but in other respects the plots are identical. There being no objection to the assassination of a Governor of Boston, the opera was presented at Rome, Feb. 17, 1859, and it has recently been revived and included in the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. The principal musical numbers in Verdi's opera are: Act I: "La rivedra nell'estasi," Richard; "Di speranze e glorie piena," Rene; "Volta la terrea," Oscar; the witch-music "Re del abisso," "Di' tu se fedele," Richard; Act II: "Ma dall'arido," Amelia; "M'ami, M'ami," Richard and Amelia; "Odi tu come," trio; Act III: "Morro, ma prima in grazia," Amelia; "O dolcezzo perdute," Rene; "Saper vorreste," Oscar.

Barber of Bagdad. Peter Cornelius' two-act comic opera to his own libretto was produced at Weimar by Liszt, Dec. 16, 1858, where its failure caused Liszt's retirement. Years after Cornelius' death it was revived in German and English with complete success. The story deals with the famous barber of the Arabian Nights, and his interference with the love affairs of Nurredin and Margiana.

Barber of Seville. The delightful "Figaro" comedies of Beaumarchais have been the inspiration of many composers. Paisiello's opera was produced at St. Petersburg with complete success in 1780, and, although Rossini obtained his permission to treat the same subject, it was revived when Rossini's opera was presented at Paris, and the rival works became the subject of heated controversy; with the result, however, that Rossini's alone has survived. Rossini's opera, in two acts, was written to a libretto by Sterbini, and was first performed at Rome, Feb. 5, 1816. Doctor Bartolo wishes to marry his charming ward, Rosina, who loves and is loved by Count Almaviva, whom she knows as Lindoro. Figaro the Barber interests himself in the affairs of the lovers; suggests that the Count obtain entrance to Bartolo's house in the guise of a soldier with a billet for lodgings; tells Rosina of Almaviva's love for her, and carries a note to him from her. Bartolo's suspicions are aroused by Rosina's inky finger, and when the pretended soldier appears, he sends Rosina from the room, and declares he has a license against billets. While he looks for the license Almaviva makes love to Rosina, and Bartolo, on discovering this, makes such a row that the guards enter and Almaviva is obliged to retire. The second act reveals Almaviva once more in Bartolo's house, this time disguised as a singing master, come to replace Basilio, who is ill. In the love scene which follows Rosina is permitted to interpolate songs at discretion, as Rossini's music has been lost. Unfortunately the real Basilio presents himself, but Figaro bribes him to silence, and an elopement is planned for that night. Bartolo has obtained a note of Rosina's to Almaviva; sends for a notary to hasten his own wedding with her, and then tries to make her believe that Lindoro and Figaro have conspired to betray her to Count Almaviva. Rosina hears with delight that Lindoro and Almaviva are one and the same, the notary is bribed, and Bartolo is tricked into signing what he believes is a contract of marriage between himself and his ward, but which is really the marriage contract of Rosina and Almaviva. His rage is allayed when Almaviva presents him with Rosina's dowry. The original cast consisted of Figaro, Zamboni, bar.; Almaviva, Garcia, ten.; Bartolo, Botticelli, bass; Basilio, Vittarelli, bass; Rosina, Giogi Righetti, sop.; Berta, Signorina Rossi, sop. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Ecco ridente il cielo" (serenade), Almaviva; "Largo al factotum," Figaro; "Una voce poco fa," Rosina; "Calumny aria," Basilio; "E il maestro io faccio," Rosina and Figaro; Act II: "Ma vedi il mio destino," Bartolo; "Sempre gridi" (Aria di Sorbetto), Berta; "Zitti, zitti," terzetto. The barrel is furnished with a series of pegs which open the valves as it revolves, admitting currents of air to a set of pipes. The same movement that turns the barrel pumps the bellows. The compass is generally about two octaves and a half. The barrel may be made to shift in position, in which case more than one tune can be played. Larger forms of barrel organ were once employed in churches, but have given way to melodeons. The principle may be studied in miniature in the music box, where the teeth of a steel comb are set in vibration by a barrel. It has been applied to such elaborate instruments as the "APOLLONICON," and to organs for private houses ranging in cost from $500 to $8,000, which imitate orchestral effect. When provided with manuals these elaborate instruments are called "Barrel and Finger Organs." Street pianos are also operated by the barrel mechanism.

Bayreuth became the centre of the Wagner cult from 1872 when Richard Wagner took up his residence there and began his plans for the "Festspielhaus," the corner stone of which was laid May 22, 1872, with elaborate ceremonies, including a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony. Wagner societies in all parts of the world raised the money for the new theatre, which was designed by Gottfried Semper with suggestions from Wagner, and opened in Aug., 1876, with performances of two cycles of the "Ring des Nibelungen," causing a loss of nearly $40,000. "Parsifal" was performed there first in July and Aug., 1882, and was restricted to that theatre until Dec. 24, 1903, when it was produced at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, under management of Heinrich Conried, Alfred Hertz conducting. An excellent English production by Henry W. Savage followed. Bayreuth has continued to be the home of Frau Cosima Wagner, and of Siegfried Wagner, who bitterly opposed the American productions of the "Bunenwehfestspiel" or stage festival dedicatory play, as Wagner termed "Parsifal." However, the music had been made known in concert form before the New York episode. Since the beginning Bayreuth has been the principal training school of Wagnerian singers and conductors.

Beethoven, van (Ludwig) composed nine great symphonies, the last with chorus, the opera "FIDELIO," unsurpassed sonatas for piano, and established himself for all time as the world's greatest master of absolute music. He composed, in fact, in every form known to his time, often expanding, sometimes modifying, always improving, never inventing. Neither formalist nor revolutionist, but overriding rules only when they seemed to fetter his genius, assuming no pose of mysticism, stooping to such programme music as a battle piece, elevating that form to the highest pinnacle in the Pastoral Symphony; revising, correcting, rewriting his music with infinite patience; striving always for higher inspiration and clarity of expression, he stood aloof from his contemporaries, and he stands alone today—a sun in the musical firmament wherein other composers are the stars, the planets, the comets, if you will,—or merely the satellites. He was baptized at Bonn, Dec. 17, 1770, from which it may be inferred that he was born on the previous day. The Beethovens were not noble, but followed the Dutch custom of indicating their place of origin by the prefix "van." This appears to have been an obscure village near Louvain, whence they migrated to Antwerp in 1650. Ludwig van Beethoven went from there to Bonn as musician and bass singer to the Elector of Cologne. His son Johann sang tenor, and became electoral chapelmaster in Mar., 1773. On Nov. 12, 1767, Johann married Maria Magdalena Leym, born Keverich, widowed daughter of the chief cook at Ehrenbreitstein, from which union were born seven children, the subject of this sketch being second, and the eldest to survive infancy. Since 1889 No. 515 Bonngasse, where Ludwig was born, has been reserved as a memorial, having been purchased by an association of which the late Dr. Joachim was president. The elder Ludwig survived until Dec. 24, 1773, when his grandson, who distinctly remembered him in after life, was three years old. Young Ludwig began to study both clavier and violin when four years of age. To these studies his father added the three Rs, and until he was 13 he picked up a little Latin at a public school. At eight he played in public, and the following year, having nothing more to learn from his father, took lessons from Pfeiffer, a musician attached to the Bonn opera, and studied organ with Van den Eeden. At the age of 10 he composed variations, which were published in 1783. Neefe, who succeeded to the post of court organist and likewise taught Beethoven, predicted that he would become a second Mozart, and left him in charge of the organ when not yet 12 years old. Beethoven could then play nearly all of Bach's Well Tempered Clavier, and read well at sight. At 12 the child became cembalist to the orchestra, which required that he should conduct the opera band. In this position he became acquainted with operas by Gluck, Paisiello, Salieri, and Sarti. Three sonatas for solo, piano, and the song "Schilderung eines Mädchens," published in 1783, appear to have been composed at this time. For his work in the theatre the lad received no salary, but soon he was appointed assistant organist to Neefe, and as such received 150 florins. On the death of Elector Max Friedrich, his successor, Max Franz, made a revision of his household, reducing the allowance to Neefe, but without increasing that of Beethoven. The song "An einem Säugling" and a rondo for piano were published in 1784, and in 1785 he published the song "Wenn jemand eine Reise thut," three quartets for piano and strings, and received violin lessons from Franz Ries. Beethoven's first visit to Vienna, made in 1787, afforded opportunity for a few lessons from Mozart, who is said to have remarked on hearing him play: "Pay attention to him; he will make a noise in the world some day or other." He seems likewise to have attracted the attention of Haydn, who wrote to Artaria, "I should like to know who this Ludwig is," but may have had in mind some other Ludwig. His sojourn in Vienna was abruptly terminated by the illness of his mother, who died July 17. A piano prelude in F minor and a trio in E flat are dated 1787, and in that year he formed the acquaintance of the widowed Frau von Breuning, with whose family he maintained a lifelong friendship, and of the young Count Waldstein, to whom he afterwards dedicated one of his greatest sonatas. Frau von Breuning engaged Beethoven to give lessons to her little girl and the youngest of her three sons, and soon made him one of the family. His acquaintance with the Countess Hatzfeld dates from the same period. In 1788 Beethoven, while retaining his post of assistant organist to the electoral court at Bonn, played viola in the opera, which had been remodelled by the Elector, included an orchestra of 31, led by Reicha, with an extended repertoire and a goodly array of singers. Mozart's operas were given frequently. In this year Beethoven was recognized as the head of his family. His father had lost his voice, and had become a drunkard, and, while the Elector did not strike him off his pay roll, he directed part of his salary be paid the son. In 1790 Haydn, who was on his way to London, accompanied by Salomon, was the guest of the Elector on Christmas Day. It is probable that the two masters, one in his zenith, the other yet unknown, met on this occasion, and it is certain that two years later, when Haydn was returning from London, and again stopped at Bonn, Beethoven showed him a cantata which he praised highly. Two cantatas, one of the death of Emperor Joseph, the song "Der freie Mann," two piano preludes, the "Venni Amore" variations, the "Ritter ballet" (possibly arranged by Count Waldstein), an octet and a rondino for strings, a trio for strings, 14 variations in E flat for piano, violin, and 'cello, 12 variations for violin and piano, some songs, and an allegro and minuet for two flutes were composed in these years. By this time, although his compositions were fewer than those of other great composers at the same age, the Elector seems to have become impressed with Beethoven's genius, for he arranged to send him to Vienna to study with Haydn, paying his salary for two years. Beethoven arrived in Vienna in Nov., 1792, with a matter of 25 ducats, or about $62, in his pockets, and was cordially received by Haydn, who is reported to have said that he meant to set him to work on great operas in anticipation of his own retirement. He lodged in the garret of a printing office outside the city walls, and paid about 25 cents an hour for his lessons from the most celebrated composer of the day. Fux's "Gradus ad Parnasum" was the text book used. The relations between master and pupil soon ceased to be cordial, and, although there was no open disagreement, Beethoven obtained instruction from Schenck in secret, and in 1794, when Haydn again went to England, studied counterpoint with Albrechtsberger and violin with Schuppanzigh. Beethoven never acknowledged any obligation to Haydn, and as it was the rule of that master to keep still when he could n't speak well of people, his opinion of his pupil is doubtful. Albrechtsberger, however, did not hesitate to warn his other pupils to let Beethoven alone because he was "incapable of learning, and would never amount to anything." In 1792 Beethoven's father died, but the Elector continued, at Beethoven's request, to pay his salary to his brothers in Bonn until Mar., 1794, continuing Beethoven's own allowance as well. A few months later the French Republican army seized Bonn, and Beethoven was thereafter to regard Vienna as his home. Despite bad manners, slovenly habits, and a total disregard for conventions, Beethoven made warm friends among the nobility, and Prince and Princess Karl Lichnowsky, who had already presented him with a quartet of strings, now made him an allowance of 600 guildens per annum, besides keeping a room at his disposal in their house. He quarrelled with his friends and patrons on the slightest provocation, often without any at all, though he sometimes made profuse apologies when realizing himself in the wrong. An amusing instance of his arrogance was displayed when he learned that Prince Lichnowsky had ordered his servant to answer Beethoven's bell before his own. Beethoven thereupon promptly engaged a servant for his exclusive use. It may be that the Viennese regarded his independence as a joke, it may be that his remarkable powers of improvising were weighed against his faults. At any rate, he was not merely tolerated, but cultivated — by women as well as men. His industry in composition was prodigious. He ordinarily arose about five o'clock and worked until noon, when dinner was served, but he sometimes forgot to eat. He often took long walks in the afternoon, especially if living in one of the many villages in the environs of Vienna, as was his rule in summer; spending his evening in society or at the theatre. During his walks he always carried a note book in which to jot down musical ideas as they occurred to him, and he usually kept several compositions in hand at a time, working at each in turn, as he felt disposed. He hated to be interrupted, and often sang the melodies he was writing in a voice far from pleasant, strumming at his piano, stamping, or roaring aloud. Sometimes he spent days in rewriting. His note books show 18 attempts at one aria in "Fidelio" (O Hoffnung). The irregularity of his habits and his need of solitude when composing may have had something to do with the frequency with which he changed his lodging, often at great expense and inconvenience. In 1795 the list of compositions written in Vienna included some trios, the first three piano sonatas, which he dedicated to Haydn; 12 Variations on "Se vuol ballare," 13 on "Es war einmal," eight for four hands on Count Waldstein's theme, nine for solo piano on "Quant' è più bello," a trio for oboes, corno inglese, and piano, and a violin rondo in G, the B flat concerto for piano and orchestra, the songs "Adelaide," "Opferlied," and "Seufzer eines Ungeliebten"; 12 minuets, 12 Deutsche Tänze for orchestra, and the canon "Im Arme der Liebe." Heretofore Beethoven had only played in private houses in Vienna. Mar. 29, 1795, he appeared at the annual actors' fund benefit at the Burg Theatre, playing his own concerto in C major; two days later playing a concerto of Mozart's at the benefit given his widow, and on Dec. 18, a concerto of his own at a concert given by Haydn. Jan. 10, 1796, he played with Haydn again, and then visited Nuremberg, and perhaps Prague, and finally Berlin, where the king gave him a box of gold coin. He was in Prague during February, and composed "Ah perfido" for Mme. Duschek, but November found him back in Vienna, where he composed a farewell song for the troops leaving for the Napoleonic wars, and later gave a concert with the Rombergs. Three piano sonatas (Op. 2), 12 variations on a minuet "à la Vigano," and six minuets for piano were published in 1796; while many more important works were under way. In 1798 Beethoven met Bernadotte, then French ambassador at Vienna, from whom it is said he first received the idea of the Eroica symphony. His amusing encounter with Steibelt, the pianist, occurred at this time. Beethoven had composed a trio for piano, clarinet, and 'cello which was played at the house of Count Fries. Steibelt had assumed a haughty manner, and when they met again a week later, Steibelt produced a new quintet, and extemporized on the finale of Beethoven's trio; whereupon Beethoven took the 'cello part of Steibelt's composition, turned it upside down, and played a theme and variations which drove Steibelt out of the house. His encounter with Woelfl, which happened on his return from two successful concerts in Prague, had a more agreeable ending. The two men played together at Count Wetzlar's home, and became good friends, although Beethoven did not return the compliment Woelfl afterwards paid him in dedicating a group of sonatas to him. The first concert which Beethoven undertook for his own benefit in Vienna took place April 2, 1800, at which his Symphony No. 1, which had been completed the previous year, and his Septet were produced, and at which he played a piano concerto of his own. April 18 he appeared with Punto, the horn player, at a concert given by the latter. They played Beethoven's horn and piano sonata, which won an encore despite the Burg Theatre's rules to the contrary. In this year Beethoven began his practice of spending the summer in the country, going to Unter-Döbling, a village two miles from Vienna. On his return to town he accepted Czerny as a pupil. Some idea of Beethoven's business methods may be had from the statement that about this time he sold his Septet, Symphony in C, Piano concerto in B flat, and B flat sonata to Hoffmeister of Leipsic for 20 ducats, or about $50 each, himself reducing the concerto to half price on the ground that it was by no means one of his best. Mar. 28, 1801, his ballet, "Prometheus," was produced at the Burg Theatre, where it had a run of 16 nights. Its popularity resulted in the publication of a piano score, and the following year it had a second run of 13 nights. With money in his pocket Beethoven exchanged the lodgings he had maintained for the past two years at No. 241 "im tiefen Graben" to the more salubrious Sailerstätte, whence he could overlook the ramparts; and in the summer he went to Hetzendorf, where he worked at "The Mount of Olives," his oratorio to words by Huber. Beethoven, at this time entering upon his most prolific and useful period as a composer, began to have premonitions of the deafness which was soon to overtake him, and of the liver complaint, both the result of a severe malady of early manhood, which combined to render him melancholy and more irascible than ever in later life. His constitution was naturally rugged. Although but five feet five inches high, he was stockily built, with broad shoulders and powerful muscles. His hair, which became perfectly white toward the close of his life, was black and abundant; his complexion ruddy, and he wore neither beard nor moustache, although he had to shave up to his eyes. His teeth were white and sound; his eyes dark, almost black, were very expressive, redeeming a face which may have been ugly, but was not without nobility. His fingers were short, blunt, covered with hair, but very strong. The violin sonatas in A minor and F, the grand sonatas for piano in A flat and D, and the twin sonatas he entitled "Quasi Fantasia," the second of which has become known as "The Moonlight" from a reference to moonlight in a review by Rellstab, were all composed at a time when he realized his deafness was progressive and incurable, and in which he wrote: "Every day I come nearer to the aim which I feel, though I cannot describe it, and on which alone your Beethoven can exist. No more rest for him!" April 5, 1803, "The Mount of Olives" was performed at the Theatre an der Wien, and the Symphony in D had its first hearing, while Beethoven himself played his piano concerto in C minor. The lovely and much misunderstood "Kreutzer" sonata was composed for a concert at the Augarten, May 17, and performed by Beethoven and Bridgetower, the Mulatto violinist. During the summer Beethoven was at work upon "Fidelio," having promised to write an opera for Schikaneder of the Theatre an der Wien, and upon the "Eroica." This great symphony, which was to have been called "Napoleon Bonaparte," was completed and ready for transmission to Paris when the news came that Napoleon had made himself emperor. Beethoven, who loved to mingle with the nobility, but was always a radical at heart, tore off the title page in a rage, and afterwards gave it the title which may be translated "Heroic symphony to celebrate the memory of a great man." His revulsion of feeling toward Napoleon may have had something to do with his subsequent choice of "Rule Britannia" and "God Save the King" as themes for variations. In 1805 Beethoven met Cherubini, then visiting Vienna, and struck up a warm friendship with him. He esteemed Cherubini above all living composers, and Handel best of those who had passed away. The opera "Fidelio" was complete on his return that year from his customary summer sojourn in the country. Beethoven now took lodgings in the Theatre an der Wien, where the work was performed with what is now known as the "Leonore Overture No. 2," Nov. 20. The French were then in possession of Vienna, which had a depressing effect on the populace. Beethoven had been disgusted with the rehearsals, and, after the third performance, the work was withdrawn. Beethoven consented to cut it down from three acts to two, eliminating three numbers, and it was again presented, and with better success, Mar. 29, 1806, until Beethoven and Baron Braun, intendant of the theatre, quarrelled, and the composer withdrew his work. What is now known as the "Leonore Overture No. 3" was played at the second series of performances. In March, 1807, Beethoven received a large sum of money from a benefit concert of his own works. The extraordinary programme included his first four symphonies, the fourth recently completed. The sonata in F minor, Op. 57, which the Hamburg publisher Cranz has called "Appassionata," the Triple concerto, and the 32 Variations for piano appeared that year; and in 1808 the publications included the "Coriolan" overture, three string quartets, Op. 59, while the C minor and Pastoral symphonies, and the Choral Fantasia were made known at a concert, Dec. 22, at the Theatre an der Wien. Jerome Bonaparte, king of Westphalia, at this time offered Beethoven a salary equal to about $1,500 if he would become chapelmaster at Cassel. The offer was declined, but it caused Archduke Rudolph and Princes Lobkowitz and Kinsky to guarantee Beethoven an annuity of about $2,000. Its actual value speedily declined with the value of paper currency, and finally brought him into litigation with the Kinsky estate, although the suit was compromised before trial. The second siege of Vienna, a sojourn at Baden, where he was somewhat benefited by the baths; his engagement to harmonize national melodies for Thompson, the Edinburgh publisher; his financial troubles, caused by the depreciation of the currency in which his annuity was paid; Wellington's defeat of the French at Vittoria, which inspired "The Battle Symphony," were external episodes of the next five years, during which Beethoven composed the "Egmont" overture, "King Stephen," "The Ruins of Athens," the Seventh and Eighth symphonies, and many works of smaller proportions. "The Battle Symphony," celebrating Wellington's victory, programme music suggested by Maelzel, was performed at a great concert, Dec. 8, 1813, in aid of soldiers wounded at Hanau, which was likewise the occasion of the Seventh Symphony's first performance, and the programme was repeated four days later. The Eighth

Symphony was first played in Jan., 1814, but was not as well received as the Seventh, "because it is so much better," said the composer. The death of Prince Lichnowsky, Beethoven's earliest patron and continuous friend, and his quarrel with Maelzel, whom he sued for taking an unauthorized copy of "The Battle Symphony" to England, and a successful revival of "Fidelio," were events of 1814; and during the Congress of Vienna Beethoven gave two gigantic concerts which were attended by all the notables (at one he had an audience of 6,000), met the Empress of Russia, to whom he dedicated a polonaise, Op. 89, and the piano arrangement of his Seventh Symphony in acknowledgment of her present of 200 ducats, or about $500. In 1815 Caspar Beethoven died, leaving his nine year old son to the composer's care. Beethoven had long assisted this brother and his family, and had become involved in a quarrel with his devoted friend Stephen Breuning because of Caspar. But he detested his brother's widow, and only obtained possession of his nephew after bitter litigation with her. The lad Carl, toward whom Beethoven was always kind and indulgent, proved a troublesome and expensive care. There was compensation that year in the fact of his then receiving his first public honour—the freedom of the city of Vienna. In 1818 Beethoven began his grand Mass, meant for the installation of his patron Archduke Rudolph as Archbishop of Olmutz, although it was not completed until after that event. He was also busy with sonatas and the great Ninth Symphony, and he seems to have searched eagerly for an opera libretto, without being able to find one that suited him. In 1824 Carl Beethoven, who had failed in his examinations at the University and at the Polytechnic as well, attempted suicide, and in consequence was arrested and ordered to leave Vienna. Finally he enlisted in the army, but in 1826 he joined his uncle at the home of Johann, another of Beethoven's brothers, who had a small estate at Gneixendorf, a village near Krems. As the result of another quarrel, due the grasping nature of Johann, Beethoven determined to return with Carl to Vienna, but caught cold in making the journey, and had to take to his bed on reaching Vienna. The cold resulted in an inflammation of the lungs, and to this dropsy succeeded. Beethoven was nearing his end. He had completed sketches for a Tenth Symphony, a requiem, and music for "Faust," and felt that his best work was yet to come. Tappings failed to relieve him, however; he became emaciated and weak. March 24, 1827, the sacraments were administered, and on Monday, March 26, he died during a violent thunderstorm. There were most elaborate ceremonies at the funeral three days later, which was attended by a multitude of people of every class, and the remains of the illustrious composer were interred in the Währinger Cemetery. A complete list of Beethoven's works according to the Breitkopf and Härtel catalogue is here annexed. For further study of his life see: Beethoven's Letters, "Ludwig van Beethovens Leben," A. W. The music here classed as "Supplemental," and which is lacking in opus numbers, together with eleven "Wiener Tanze" discovered at the Thomasschule, Leipsic, 1907, completes the list of the master's authentic works. Dr. Hugo Riemann is authority for the statement that these "Wiener Tanze" were composed in 1819 for a society of seven musicians (they are 7-part waltzes), and are the works referred to by Schindler, which that biographer was unable to trace.

Beffara (Louis François) collected valuable data relating to Paris opera, destroyed in the Commune, Paris, 1871; Commissaire of Police. B. Nonancourt, Aug. 23, 1751; d. Feb. 2, 1838.

Beggar's Opera. Contained 69 ballad tunes scored by Dr. Pepusch, who composed the overture. The witty text was written by John Gay, and the first performance took place at Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre, London, Jan. 29, 1727, followed by what was the phenomenal run in those days of 62 repetitions for the first season. The profits were nearly $20,000 for John Rich, the manager, and nearly $3,500 for the author, who according to custom had the receipts for four "author's nights." Gay is said to have received the idea of "A Newgate Pastoral" from Swift. He satirized the court, the opera, and the politicians of the time, and the wonderful popularity of the work resulted in the production of other BALLAD OPERAS. The ballad tunes were of English, Scotch, or Irish origin.

Bell. The mouth of a tubular instrument, gives increased power because it permits of setting a larger volume of air in vibration, and modifies the tone produced. The curved mouth of brass instruments gives the even overtones which would otherwise be wanting in a closed pipe.

Bell. In the modern orchestra bells have been superseded by metal tubes which are more easily tuned, may be placed in a frame like a xylophone, and are much more convenient than the old glockenspiel, which was played with keys. The effect of a chime of bells is thus obtained in "Parsifal," "Tosca," as well as in "Magic Flute," where bells were first employed in opera. Bells were used in the worship of Osiris; formed ornaments to the vestments of the Jewish high priests, and seem to have been common to all nations for purposes of signalling and of worship. In many instances the precious metals entered into the composition of bells, but experiment has proved that the best alloy, neither too brittle nor too dull in tone, is 76.5 parts of copper to 23.5 parts of tin. Bells may be sharpened by shaving the inside of the rim, or flattened by paring the rim itself. A chime in perfect tune is, however, the very rare exception. Change ringing is practised where there are more than three bells. Six changes may be rung on three bells, 24 changes on four bells, and so the number increases until with 12 bells 479,001,600 changes are possible. The largest known bell, that cast in Moscow, 1653, now broken, measures 21 feet, 6 inches in diameter at the mouth and weighs 193 tons.

Bell Gamba. Eight-foot organ stop with bell mouth.

Belli (Girolamo) composed sacred music and madrigals. B. Argenta, near Ferrara; first publication, 1583; last, 1610.

Belli (Giulio) composed madrigals and church music; directed music in Imola Cathedral, 1582; entered Franciscan Order, 1590. B. about 1560, Longiano.

Bellini (Vincenzo) composed "La SONNAMBULA," "NORMA," and "I Puritani," operas remarkable for the beauty of their melody, and which still hold their place in repertoire. Son of an organist in Catania, Sicily, who gave him his first instruction in music. Bellini's talent was manifest at an early age, and a Sicilian nobleman volunteered to defray the expense of educating him at the Naples Conservatory, then directed by Zingarelli. His first work, "Adelson e Salvini," was produced in 1825, and gained him a commission from Barbaja, impresario of the San Carlos, La Scala, and other opera houses. "Bianca e Fernando" was the result, and it was so well received in Naples that Barbaja commissioned him to write a new opera for the celebrated tenor, Rubini, for performance in Milan. The ornate music of Rossini then ruled in opera, and the simplicity of the airs in "Il Pirata" were admirably sung by Rubini, and, after the performance at Milan, 1827, spread the young composer's fame through other European music centres. "La Straniera," his next work, given at Milan in 1828, likewise met with a cordial reception, but did not prove popular elsewhere. "Zaire," produced 1829, in Parma, was unsuccessful. "I Capuletti ed i Montecchi," produced at La Fenice in Venice, 1830, was cordially received. Mme. Pasta was the Romeo, a rôle later selected by Johanna Wagner for her debut in London. "La Sonnambula," Bellini's greatest work, was produced at La Scala in 1831, and speedily became as popular in England as in Italy. "Norma," second only to "Sonnambula," followed in less than a year. Bellini visited London in 1833, and then went to Paris, where he was engaged, on the advice of Rossini, to write an opera for the Theatre Italien. In 1835 "I Puritani" was performed. After its production Bellini again visited England, but was attacked by dysentery, and died at the early age of 34, Sept. 24, 1835. Rossini, whose interest in the young composer was most fatherly, had advised him to give especial attention to orchestration and dramatic effect, recognizing weaknesses which are now generally apparent. His flow of melody was rich enough, however, to atone for many deficiencies, and the arias sung by Tamburini, Alboni, Patti, Grisi, Lilli Lehmann, Rubini, Mario, and other great singers are still the delight of the few who are capable of interpreting them. B. 1802.

Bellows, by which currents of air are supplied the stops of an organ, were originally of the primitive type still to be seen in an old-fashioned kitchen. Organs in the 4th century were so equipped. As additional pipes were added the bellows was enlarged, and two were employed to provide continuous pressure. In 1762 Cumming invented a bellows combining the feeder with a reservoir which maintained a fairly even pressure. In large modern organs the bellows is usually replaced by a rotary fan or metal air pump, operated by hydraulic or electric power, or by gas engine.

Benvenuto Cellini. Hector Berlioz's opera in three acts, to book by Wailly and Barbier, was first performed at the Académie, Paris, Sept. 3, 1838, where it failed, but has since assumed an important place in modern repertoire. The action is laid in Rome, 1532, when Clement VII was Pope. Benvenuto Cellini loves Teresa, daughter of the papal treasurer Balducci, but has a rival in Fieramosca, the papal sculptor, who is favoured by Balducci. Cellini and Teresa plan an elopement, at which the Capuchin Ascanio, Cellini's pupil, is to assist; but their plans are overheard by Fieramosca. Just then Balducci returns, and Teresa tells him there is a thief hidden in the house, in order to explain why she is up so late. Balducci finds Fieramosca's hiding place. Cellini escapes while Balducci, the servants, and the neighbours are beating the supposed thief, who finally jumps through the window. The second act discloses Cellini with his pupils and friends in a tavern, where he is unable to pay the score until Ascanio brings him a purse from the Pope, to be given him on condition that he immediately finish his statue of Perseus. Displeased at the size of the purse, Cellini and his friends resolve to impersonate the treasurer Balducci at the theatre and bring him into ridicule. Fieramosca, who has again managed to overhear the conversation, plans with Pompeo to adopt costumes similar to those Cellini and Ascanio are to wear at the rendezvous with Teresa, hoping to forestall Cellini. The scene which follows shows the theatre. King Midas is being enacted. Balducci, who is in the audience with Teresa, is enraged at the likeness King Midas bears him, and raises a disturbance, in the course of which both Cellini and Fieramosca, disguised alike as monks, approach Teresa. A fight ensues, Cellini stabs Pompeo, Teresa and Ascanio manage to break through the crowd and escape to Cellini's studio, but Cellini himself is in danger of being maltreated by a mob. Just then cannon are fired, announcing the carnival is over; the lights are suddenly extinguished, and Cellini rushes out under cover of the darkness. In the third act, Teresa and Ascanio are in Cellini's studio, greatly distressed. Cellini enters, explains his escape, but as he and Teresa are about to leave for Florence, Balducci and Fieramosca appear to claim Teresa as the latter's promised bride. Cardinal Salviati comes in to see the statue of Perseus, and when he hears of Cellini's escapade, threatens to have him punished, and to have some one else complete the statue. Cellini, surrounded by his workmen, and armed with a hammer, is ready to demolish the Perseus, which he declares he can complete in an hour. Unwilling to lose the masterpiece, the Cardinal promises if he will do so he shall be pardoned and receive Teresa as his bride. Work instantly begins. Running short of metal, Cellini sacrifices his creations in gold and silver. At last the mould is broken, the statue of Perseus is revealed in all its glory, and in the enthusiasm it creates Fieramosca is the first to embrace his erstwhile rival, whose genius he appreciates better than the rest.

Berlin owed its importance in music as in everything to the genius of Frederick the Great. Besides the two principal schools discussed in the articles following this, it was the seat of the Royal Academy of Fine Arts, a section of which was devoted to music, and possessed splendid opera houses liberally subsidized by the German Emperor and King of Prussia, who was conspicuously active in their management. There were numerous other institutions of which the SING-AKADEMIE was the most notable, and there were a number of choral and orchestral concerts throughout the season. Königlichen Akademischen Hochschule für Musik was founded in connection with the Königlichen Akademie der Künste, and as its name implies, is an academical high school for music, teaching the art and its practice in all branches. For many years the late Dr. Joseph Joachim presided over its violin and orchestral departments, and was the director and president of the board. Dr. Max Bruch was closely associated with Dr. Joachim as the head of the faculty in composition and theory, Prof. Ernest Rudorff was head of the piano and organ departments, and Prof. Adolph Schulze of the vocal department. At first an organization of Fasch's pupils devoted to the study of his own sacred music, regular meetings were held on Thursday evenings of each week in the season from May 24, 1791. Rooms were set apart for the singers in the Royal Academy of Fine Arts, and in 1801 the public was first admitted on the occasion of an Easter concert. For a time the proceeds were devoted to charity, but in 1827 the organization built its own home, and the funds received thereafter were devoted to the propaganda of oratorio and other sacred music. Mendelssohn directed the Matthew Passion of Bach in 1829. Fasch had been succeeded by his pupil Carl Friedrich Zelter. Carl Friedrich Rungenhagen was director from 1832 to 1851, then August Grell, who held office until 1879, and was followed by Martin BLUMNER. Stern'sches Konservatorium der Musik was founded in 1850, having quarters in the "Philharmonie." Berlioz (Hector) developed the resources of the orchestra so largely as to deserve the title "Father of modern orchestration"; was first to employ large masses of musicians and singers in the production of big tonal effects; prepared the way for the so-called "Music of the Future" by elaborating and exemplifying in his own operas the theories of his favourite master, Gluck, regarding the relation of music and the drama; composed the operas "BENVENUTO CELLINI," "La DAMNATION DE FAUST," the symphony "Harold en Italie," which have finally ranked him with the greatest of French composers, but failed to secure recognition in France during his life, save as a writer of music criticism and "feuilletons." The son of a country physician of La Côte St. André, Grenoble, Berlioz was sent to the Paris medical school to qualify himself for his father's profession. As a boy he had studied Catel's "Harmony," had learned to play the flageolet somewhat badly, the guitar tolerably well, and had found delight in Gluck's "Orfeo," but was unable to obtain a systematic musical training. He detested medicine, loved music, and neglected his work for the library of the Paris Conservatoire. Determined to devote his life to music, his parents were equally determined he should commit no such folly, and they cut off his allowance. But in 1823 he was a student at the Conservatoire, and there he worked during seven years, always in poverty, rarely on good terms with his teachers, except Lesueur, supporting himself by such expedients as singing in a theatre chorus, and acquiring a large and larger contempt of the prevailing style in music, of which the director of the Conservatoire, Cherubini, was the leader. Before entering the Conservatoire he had received lessons of Lesueur which enabled him to compose a mass for St. Roch's Church, and in his years of study he composed a "Fantasia on Shakespeare's Tempest," "Les Francs-juges," and "Waverly" overtures, and "Eight Scenes from Faust." In 1830, to his great surprise, he secured the prix de Rome with the cantata "La Mort de Sardanapale." In Italy he sighed for Paris, and after an 18 months' sojourn, the ministry permitted him to return home. "La Captive," a song, a revision of his "Symphony Fantastique" and sketches of the "Corsair" and "King Lear" overtures were worked out in Italy, but brought neither fame nor money on his return. In 1833 he married the Irish actress Henrietta Smithson, who had been playing Shakespearian rôles at the Odéon, and, failing to earn a livelihood in music, took to journalism. "Harold in Italie," "Symphonie Funèbre et Triomphale," "Romeo et Juliette," his requiem on the death of Napoleon, and "Benvenuto Cellini," his opera, were all produced during this period of hack work, from which he was released by the princely benevolence of Paganini, who gave him 20,000 francs. Then the government paid him 4,000 francs for his "Requiem," and 10,000 francs for his "Symphonie Funèbre et Triomphale," in 1840. He was thus able to tour Germany, a project which his wife bitterly opposed, and which brought about their separation, but proved a complete artistic success, for Schumann and Liszt had already made some of his works known, and his genius was acknowledged from St. Petersburg to London while still unknown to Parisians. Home again in 1843, Paris had nothing better to offer him than a conductor's post. Visits to Vienna, to St. Petersburg, to London increased his reputation abroad, and at the Paris Exposition of 1855 he was commissioned to write an opening "Te Deum" and "L'Impériale" cantata for its close. These brought him the Legion of Honor. Membership in the Académie and the librarianship at the Conservatoire soon followed. On the death of his first wife Berlioz had married a singer, Mlle. Martin Recio. Her death occurred in 1862, leaving him quite alone in the world, for his son, who had occasioned him much anxiety, was then in the navy. The following year "Les Troyens," an opera which he regarded as his masterpiece, proved a flat failure. Berlioz composed no more. He made a tour of Russia in 1867, but his health had failed, and he died in Paris, Mar. 9, 1869. Those who wish to understand Berlioz more fully will do well to read his delightful "Soirees de l'Orchestra," his letters, and his "Memoires," which have been translated into English. Bohème. Giacomo Puccini's four-act opera libretto by Giuseppe Giacosa and Luigi Illica, founded on Henri Murger's "La Vie Bohème," was first produced in Turin, Feb. 1, 1896, and has since been played throughout Europe and America. The action is laid in Paris about 1830. The curtain rises on the garret where Marcel and Rudolphe are painting and writing. It is cold, and Rudolphe burns the manuscript of a tragedy that they may warm themselves, a task in which the philosopher Colline soon joins them. The musician Schaunard comes with food and wine, and while they are making merry, Bernard the landlord enters, demanding his rent. They fuddle him with wine, chaff him about his amours, and then push him out of doors. Rudolphe must complete a manuscript, but the other young men are bound for a lark. They leave him, promising to return for him later. Mimi, a pretty young neighbour, comes to ask for a light, and as she is leaving a gust of wind blows out the candle, and she drops her key. They grope for the lost key in the dark. Rudolphe finds it, but places it in his pocket, then takes Mimi's hand, tells her of his work, and she replies by narrating her own little history. Rudolphe's companions call to him from the street, he opens a window to answer, and the moonlight reveals to his friends below Mimi standing beside him. In the second act students and their friends are making merry in front of the Café Momus in honour of Christmas eve. Rudolphe introduces Mimi to his friends Colline, Marcel, and Schaunard and they order refreshments. Parpignol the toy dealer enters with his wares, and is surrounded by the children, whose mothers finally lead them away. Musette, formerly the sweetheart of Marcel, but who has cast him off, comes in, richly clad, and accompanied by her new lover, Alcindor, to whom she talks at the top of her voice to attract Marcel's attention. Sending Alcindor away on an errand, she joins Marcel and his friends, and as the waiter comes up demanding his money, tells him to add the amount to Alcindor's account. Just as Alcindor receives this unexpected bill the group of friends march away, following a procession of soldiers. In the third act Rudolphe confesses to Marcel that he means to leave Mimi, though he still loves her, because she is dying of consumption, and he lacks the means to provide for her comfort. Mimi, who has been seeking counsel of Marcel, overhears this; a fit of coughing reveals her presence, and as Marcel rushes into the inn, where he hears Musette flirting with some one, Rudolphe and Mimi say farewell. In the fourth act we return to the garret. Marcel and Rudolphe are unable to work for thinking of Musette and Mimi. Colline and Schaunard again join their friends. They are soon followed by Mimi, who realizes that she is dying, but cannot resist the temptation to see Rudolphe again. She is cold. Rudolphe tries to warm her hands by chafing them. Musette, overcome with grief, gives Marcel her jewels to pawn in order to buy food and wine, and Colline, taking Schounard with him, goes forth to pawn his coat in order to provide further comforts. Mimi, who has pretended to be asleep, now talks to Rudolphe about their happiness in the past. The others return bringing food, wine, and fuel, but it is too late. Mimi falls asleep, then dies, and the curtain falls. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Mi chiamano Mimi," Rudolphe, ten., and Mimi, sop.; "O soave fanciulla," Rudolphe; Act II: waltz song, Musette, sop.; Act III: "Addio, senza rancore," Mimi and Rudolphe; Act IV: "Sono andati? Fingero di dormire," Mimi and Rudolphe.

Bohemian Girl. Michael William Balfe's three-act opera to book by Bunn, adapted from Fanny Ellsler's ballet "The Gipsy," was produced at Drury Lane Theatre, London, Nov. 27, 1843, and speedily became one of the most popular operas in English. As "La Bohémienne," with alterations and additions, the work was favourably received at the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, and there are likewise Italian and German versions. Thaddeus, a noble Polish exile, joins a band of gypsies and saves the life of Arline, the little daughter of Count Arnheim, Governor of Presburg. Refusing to drink the Emperor's health, Thaddeus is in danger of arrest. Devilshoof, the gipsy captain, interferes, saves Thaddeus, but is himself arrested. Later he escapes, taking Arline with him, and the gipsy band disappears. The band returns 12 years later. Arnheim still mourns his daughter, whom he has given up as dead, but consoles himself in the society of his nephew, Florestein, who falls into the hands of the gypsies. Arline and Thaddeus love each other, but Arline has a rival in the queen of the gypsies, who resolves to rid herself of the girl. She gives Arline a medallion stolen from Florestein, which that young rake recognizes when he meets her at a fair, and vainly tries to make love to her. He causes Arline's arrest, but when she is brought before Arnheim, the Count notes a scar upon her arm, and soon learns that she is his daughter. Despite the alteration of her fortunes, Arline loves Thaddeus, who manages to enter the house with Devilshoof's aid, but his presence is revealed by the vengeful gipsy queen, and Thaddeus is ordered to leave the house. Arline tells her father how she loves him, and when Thaddeus proclaims his noble birth and deeds in battle, Arnheim yields. At the instigation of the gipsy queen, one of the band fires at Thaddeus, but Devilshoof deflects his aim, and the bullet kills the gipsy queen. The musical numbers are: Act I: "A Soldier's Life," Arnheim, bar.; "T is sad to leave your Fatherland," Thaddeus, ten.; "In the Gypsies' Life you may Read," Devilshoof, buffo and chorus; and the finale, "Thou Who in Might supreme"; Act II: "Silence, Silence, the Lady Moon," chorus; "I dreamt I dwelt in Marble Halls," Arline, sop.; "The Secret of her Birth," Arline and Thaddeus; Act III: "From the Hills and Valleys," quartet; "The Heart bowed down," Arnheim; "Praised be the Will of Heaven," chorus; Act IV: "When other Lips and other Hearts," and "When the Fair Land of Poland," Thaddeus.

Bohemian String Quartet founded in 1891 by Karel Hoffmann, first violin; Josef Suk, second violin; Oskar Nedbal, viola; Otto Berger, 'cellist; took its name from the fact that all the players had been educated in the excellent conservatory at Prague, Bohemia; and in aims and possibly in virtuosity corresponded with the American Kneisel Quartet. Hoffmann, who studied seven years at the Prague conservatory, was born Dec. 12, 1872. Suk composed an overture to "The Winter's Tale," a string quartet in A minor, etc., studied composition under Dvořák at Prague as well as violin. Boieldieu (François Adrien) composed "La DAME BLANCHE," which ranks with the most popular if not as the most popular of French comic operas, the "Calife de Bagdad," and other works which have been crowded out of modern repertoire. His father was secretary to the Archbishop of Rouen and his mother a milliner, but during the Revolution the elder Boieldieu obtained a divorce, remarried, and the boy took up his residence with his music master, Broche, organist of the cathedral, who was a drunkard, and abused him so that the lad ran away to Paris. His family brought him back, and Broche continued to give him the only instruction he received until he had won his first operatic success. "La fille coupable," an opera for which his father wrote the libretto, made some reputation for the young man when performed at Rouen, 1793, and encouraged him to go to Paris again. Two years later "Rosalie et Myrza" was performed at Rouen with indifferent success, and at this time he gladly sold songs to Cochet, the Paris publisher, at 12 francs each. "Deux lettres," his first opera, performed in Paris, 1796, was followed by the "Famille Suisse," which ran for a month at the Théâtre Feydeau. "Zoraïme et Zulnare," "La dot de Suzette," "Beniowski," and a number of instrumental pieces brought the composer sufficient reputation to win him a professorship of piano at the Conservatoire in 1800, and in that year his first great success, the "Calife de Bagdad," was performed. A period of study under Cherubini followed, and then came the once popular "Ma tante Aurore." Boieldieu had married the dancer Clotilde Mafleuroy in 1802, and, according to the gossip of the time, was most unhappy in his domestic relations. This may account for his acceptance of the post of conductor at the St. Petersburg Opera when his career in Paris seemed most promising. During eight years spent in the service of the Russian Emperor he composed only a few unimportant comic operas and vaudevilles. In 1811 he returned to Paris, produced "Jean de Paris" in 1812, which is rated with his best work. collaborated with other composers and taught composition at the Conservatoire, he produced nothing of note. "La Dame Blanche" was the culminating point in his career. His next work, "Les deux nuits," was a failure, and the remainder of his life, brightened it is true by his marriage with the singer Phillis, 1827, was saddened by financial difficulties, although a pension which he had lost by the expulsion of Charles X was eventually restored by Louis Philippe. B. Dec. 16, 1775, Rouen; d. Jarcy, near Paris, Oct. 8, 1834.

Boisdeffre, de (René) composed symphony in A; "Messe Solennelle"; piano music, won the Chartier prize for chamber music, 1883. B. Vesoul, France, April 3, 1838; add. Paris.

Boito (Arrigo) composed the operas "MEFISTOFELE," "Neron," "Ero e Leandro," and wrote the libretti for Ponchielli's "Gioconda," Verdi's "Otello" and "Falstaff"; aided in the musical reforms which made possible the works of the "modern Italian school"; distinguished himself as poet, essayist, novelist. Son of an Italian painter and the Polish countess, Josephine Radolinski, his studies were directed first by Camillo Boito, his elder brother, and he became a pupil at the Milan Conservatory at the age of 14. He learned to write in Italian and French, and displayed so thorough an acquaintance with the classics as to attract the attention of Victor Hugo, who wrote him a complimentary note. "Il 4 di Giugno," a cantata, was composed for the closing competition of the Milan Conservatory, and the cantata "Le Sorelle d'Italia," composed in collaboration with Franco Facio to Boito's poem, was rewarded by an allowance from the Government to enable the two composers to study two years in Paris. "Faust" had been suggested to him as a suitable theme for opera, by his brother Camillo, and during his sojourn in Paris and an incidental visit to Germany, Boito was at work on his "Mefistofele." This opera was produced at Milan, Mar. 5, 1868. Gounod's "Faust" had already been heard, and the controversy over the respective merits of these operas developed into a riot, several duels followed, and the police were obliged to order the withdrawal of "Mefistofele." A revision of "Mefistofele," presented at Bologna in 1875, has since been performed in many parts of the world. "Ero e Leandro" was not to Boito's satisfaction, and he authorized the two musical settings by Bottesini and by Mancinelli, of which the latter has been the more successful. "Nerone" and "Orestide" are still unknown, but are assumed to embody the composer's best work. Besides his poems, novels, libretti, and essays, Boito translated the text of works by Beethoven, Wagner, and Schumann. He became inspector general of technical instruction at the Conservatory, 1892; Commander of the Crown of Italy; and Chevalier of the Legion of Honor; add. Milan.

Bonci (Alessandro) sang ten. in opera with great success in Italy, and in 1906 was engaged by Hammerstein as leading ten. at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, to offset the drawing powers of Caruso. There was, in fact, no occasion for rivalry between the two artists, Bonci being gifted with a voice of less powerful quality but of even greater sweetness. He continued to be the chief support of the Manhattan Opera House for two years, but had signed with the Metropolitan for the season of 1908-9. He was made knight of the Crown of Italy, 1902.

He was accused in 1731 of plagiarizing a madrigal by Lotti; retired to Paris, where he played 'cello before Louis XV in one of his own motets, and then to Venice, as composer to the opera.

Educated by his father GIOVANNI MARIA and by Colonna, Bononcini lived in Vienna and in Rome, where his operas "Tullo Ostilio" and "Serse" were performed; in Berlin, and in 1720 was called to London with Ariosti by Handel, where he produced the operas "Astarto," "Crispo," "Erminia," "Farnace," "California," "Astyanax," and "Griselda," all of which have been forgotten. His downfall began with the joint composition of "Muzio Scevola," the part composed by Handel being deemed the best. B. Boston Symphony Orchestra, while not the first of symphonic proportions in America in point of age, was long first as regards excellence, and really the first in America which could be called permanent, since its history from 1881 had been continuous, and the changes in personnel so gradual as to be unfelt in the concert room. The munificence of Col. Henry L. Higginson, a wealthy gentleman of Boston, made this splendid organization possible; for during the long period of years until it became self-supporting, he paid the difference between its disbursements and receipts, often amounting to many thousands of dollars, out of his own fortune. Concerts were given at first in the old Music Hall which had been erected mainly for the use of the HARVARD MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, but of late years the orchestra has enjoyed a home of its own called "Symphony Hall," which contains a large auditorium with admirable acoustic qualities, the library, dressing rooms, offices, and all that is needful for the complete convenience of audience and performers. Very early in its history the orchestra gave concerts in other cities than Boston, and in 1908 from four to 16 concerts annually were given in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, in addition to the regular home series, and a supplementary Boston course of "popular" concerts. The first conductor was Georg HENSCHEL. From 1884 to 1889 the conductor was Wilhelm GERICKE. Arthur NIKISCH held the baton for the next four years, until 1893, during which the ensemble of the orchestra reached its highest point of perfection. Mr. Nikisch established the reputation of the strings as the finest in the world, and managed to obtain perfect attack without wholly obliterating the individuality of the musicians. On the expiration of his contract, Mr. Nikisch returned to Europe, and the next conductor was Emil PAUR, who served until 1898. Mr. Gericke again became conductor, retiring in 1905. His successor was Dr. Karl MUCK, who was temporarily released from his duties at the Berlin Opera House in order that he might go to America. The first concertmeister was Bernard LISTERMANN. Franz KNEISEL, who had been concertmeister for 14 years, withdrew from the orchestra in the last year of Mr. Gericke's second administration in order to devote himself exclusively to chamber music, the members of his quartet following his example. His successors were Arbos, and then Willy HESS. Members of the orchestra were retained under contract by the year at salaries which enabled them to devote their whole time to the rehearsals and concerts of the orchestra. The annual series of Boston Symphony orchestra concerts are a feature in the musical life, not only of Boston, but of the chief cities of the Atlantic seaboard. Dr. Muck was compelled to resume his duties in Berlin at the close of the season of 1907-8, and

August Max Fiedler, of Hamburg, was engaged as his successor. Handel and Haydn Society, organized Mar. 30, 1815, was the oldest musical society in America with the exception of that at Stoughton, Mass., which dated back to Nov. 7, 1786. Gottlieb Graupner, Thomas Smith Webb, and Asa Peabody issued the call which resulted in the formation of the Handel and Haydn Society, and the original officers were Thomas Smith Webb, president; Amasa Winchester, vice-president; Matthew S. Parker, secretary; Nathaniel S. Tucker, treasurer. The only musical society in Boston at the time was the Philharmonic Society, devoted wholly to orchestral music; the Massachusetts Musical Society, formed in 1807, having disbanded. Hymn tunes were sung at first, but "The Creation" and "Messiah" were put in rehearsal, and excerpts from these oratorios were the chief attraction at the first concert given Christmas night in Stone Chapel. The audience numbered 1,000. There were less than a dozen pieces in the orchestra, the chorus number about 100, but an organ helped swell the sound, and the good people of Boston were delighted. The following year the society was chartered, and in 1818 was strong enough to present the "Messiah" in full. The number of concerts varied with the years from one to 23. The enterprise of the management made known many important works for the first time at these concerts, and the best singers were habitually engaged for solo parts. The Society took part in the Peace Jubilees in Boston and New York, 1869 and 1872, and for a time triennial festivals were given. Charles E. Horn was the first director. Carl ZERRAHN served in that capacity, 1854-98, succeeding Carl BERGMANN. After Mr. Zerrahn, the directors in order of appointment were: L. Reinhold Herman, Dr. Lang, Emil MOLLENHAUER. Apollo Club gave private subscription concerts devoted to works for male chorus. Organized July, 1871, incorporated two years later, the director from 1871 to 1902 was B. J.

Lang, who was then succeeded by Emil Mollenhauer. Choral Art Society consisted of 45 professional singers directed by Wallace Goodrich, and devoted to early church music, madrigals and glees. The organization was formed in 1901 and was supported by subscriptions. Cecilia was intended to present mixed choral works at the concerts of the HARVARD MUSICAL ASSOCIATION. Organized 1874, its separate existence under direction of B. J. Lang dated from 1876. Boston is also the seat of the NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. The Opera House was opened in 1909.

Bow is the instrument employed to set in vibration the strings of the viols, so called from the resemblance it bore the weapon of that name. The modern bow, devised by François Tourte, 1745-1835, consists of a wand of Brazil lancewood, or snakewood, to which a slight outward curve is given by the application of heat. It is about 29 inches long. At one end is the head, to which a strand of about 120 horse hairs is affixed, and at the opposite end is the nut to which the other end of the strand is secured in such a manner that it can be tightened or loosened with a screw. When ready for use the wand or bow stick now curves slightly toward the hair instead of arching away from it. Such a bow as that described is used in playing the violin and viola. Bows for the 'cello and double-bass are shorter and heavier in construction.

Bow Hand. Usually the right hand.

Bowing regulates the quality and intensity of sound on all viol instruments except as to pitch, which is altered by stopping the strings on the finger-board, usually with the left hand. The importance of correct bowing, which can hardly be overestimated, is discussed in Tartini's "Art of Bowing," and in Baillot's "Art du Violon." Up bow, down bow, staccato or saltato bow, are now usually indicated by signs in NOTATION, and the uniform bowing which should be in evidence at orchestral concerts is designed to bring about the best results of which the instruments are capable as to tone and phrasing. Passages for viols where the strings are to be plucked guitar fashion instead of bowed are marked Pizzicato, and when the bow is to be resumed Arco, "bow." It sometimes happens that passages are to be tapped with the bowstick, and these are marked Sul or Col Legno.

Bowman (Edward Morris) played organ and conducted Temple Choir, Brooklyn; Calvary Baptist Church, New York, 1906-9; helped found American College of Musicians; pupil of Bridge, Macfarren, Turpin, Guilman; taught Vassar College, 1891-95; conducted Newark Harmonic Society and Cecilian Choir. Brahms (Johannes) gave new life to the symphonic form which had been evolved by Haydn, enlarged by Beethoven, and of which he was the last great master; composed songs of exquisite loveliness, chamber music which is the delight of musicians as well as their audiences, and for solo piano, on which he was a virtuoso in early life, but with so little regard for mere display as to justify his neglect by the average concert pianist. Conscious of his ignorance of dramatic technique, Brahms never attempted opera. To him Bach and Beethoven were the world's greatest tone poets, and while called revolutionary, he adhered through life to classic forms as exemplified in their works. His taste was sufficiently catholic to permit of his knowing and admiring Wagner's scores. But from the controversy first aroused when Schumann hailed him as Beethoven's successor; when Liszt was ready to recognize in him an apostle of the music of the future; when Europe was divided between romanticists and classicists, each eager to welcome him to their camp; he maintained the even tenor of his way, content to work as best he might, and with little regard for the opinion of his contemporaries. Thus his life was singularly uneventful. Johann Jacob Brahms, 1806-72, destined by his father to succeed him in business as an innkeeper, ran away from home to devote himself to music, and was finally permitted to have his way. Eventually he became double-bass player in the Hamburg Theatre, married Johanna Henrika Christiane Nissen, and became the father of three children, of whom the composer Johannes was the second. Doubtless young Johannes received his first instruction in music from his father; then he became a pupil of O. Cossel, who recommended him to his own master, Marxsen, when he reached the age of 10. At 15 he made his first public appearance in concert, and at 16 gave a concert himself, at which he played Beethoven's "Waldstein" sonata. In 1853 he toured northern Germany in company with Remenyi the violinist. Introduced to Dr. Joachim by Remenyi, and by him to Schumann and Liszt, he was favourably received by both. Schumann not only printed an enthusiastic appreciation of Brahms in the "Neue Zeitschrift für Musik," but wrote a letter in his behalf to Dr. Härtel, the publisher. Ignoring the war of words which Schumann aroused, Brahms became court director of music to the Prince of Lippe-Detmold, 1854, where he remained four years. In 1859 he played his own D minor concerto, Op. 15, at a Gewandhaus concert, where it was immediately condemned as a departure from classic models and for lack of display passages, although it was well received afterwards when played by Clara Schumann. In 1862 Brahms settled in Vienna, where he accepted the post of conductor at the Singakademie, but relinquished it at the end of a year. His only other official appointment was that of conductor to the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, which he held from 1872 to 1875. Occasional concert tours with Dr. Joachim, visits to the German watering places in company with Mme. Schumann, were the only interruptions to an orderly and methodical life which ended peacefully, due indirectly to a severe chill with which he was attacked at Mme. Schumann's funeral. B. Hamburg, May 7, 1833; d. Vienna, April 3, 1897. In the catalogue of Brahms' works will be found: Symphony No. 1, C minor; Symphony No. 2, in D; Symphony No. 3, in F; Symphony No. 4, in E minor; Sonatas for Piano in C, Op. 1; in F minor, Op. 5; Concertos for piano with orchestra: in D, Op. 15; in B minor, Op. 83; Sonatas for 'cello and piano in E minor, Op. 38; in F, Op. 99; Trios for Piano and Strings: in B, Op. 8; in E flat, Op. 40 (viola or 'cello may be replaced by horn); in C, Op. 87; in C minor, Op. 101; in A minor (viola may be replaced by clarinet), Op. 114; quartets for strings, C minor and A minor, Op. 51; in C minor, No. 3, Op. 60 (Piano); in B minor, Op. 67; Quintets for Strings in F, Op. 88; in G, Op. 111; in D (for clarinet or viola), Op. 115; Sonatas for Violin and Piano in A, Op. 100; in D minor, Op. 108; For Solo Piano: 28 Variations on a theme of Paganini, Op. 35; Two Rhapsodies, Op. 79; For Orchestra: Serenade in D, Op. 11; Serenade in A, Op. 16; Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80; Variations on a theme of Haydn's, Op. 56 a; For chorus, etc.: "Rinaldo," cantata to text by Goethe, tenor solo, male chorus and orchestra, Op. 50; "Rhapsodie," from Goethe's "Harzreise," alto solo, male chorus, and orchestra, Op. 53; "Schichsalslied," chorus and orchestra, Op. 54; "Triumphlied," chorus and orchestra, Op. 55; "Gesang der Parzen," chorus and orchestra, Op. 89; "Fest und Gedenke sprüche," eight part chorus a capella, Op. 109; 11 part Choral-Vorspiele for organ, Op. 122 (posth.); "Ave Maria," female voices, orchestra and organ, Op. 12; "Funeral Hymn" for chorus and wind, Op. 13; Seven Marienlieder for mixed choir, Op. 22;

Breitkopf & Härtel published a complete edition of Beethoven, of Bach, and other great masters, and so much music in all that their catalogue fills 1200 pages. The house had its beginning in Leipsic, 1719, when Bernhardt Christoph Breitkopf, who came of a mining family in the Hartz, set up a printing press from which he issued a Hebrew Bible, and other works. He died Mar. 26, 1777, aged 83, but had previously turned the business over to his son, Johann Gottlob Immanuel, who, in 1750, introduced movable type for printing music, and revolutionized the trade. The publication of an opera in full score, composed by Princess Amalia of Saxony, 1756, established the reputation of the house as music publishers, and editions of the works of C. P. E. Bach, Graun, Hiller, and Leopold Mozart confirmed it. B. 1719; d. 1794. Bernhard Theodor, his eldest son, had established himself in St. Petersburg, and his second son and successor, Christoph Gottlob, after carrying on the business for a year, turned it over to G. C. HÄRTEL, the firm becoming Breitkopf & Härtel, 1795. B. 1750; d. 1800, last of the Breitkopf family. Gottfried Christoph Härtel not only enlarged the music publishing business, but added a piano factory. Besides the usual processes in use in his time, Härtel employed pewter plates for engraving music, and lithography, aided by the inventor Sennefelder. B. Schneeberg, 1763; d. July 25, 1827. For the next 8 years his nephew Florenz Härtel conducted the business, giving way to Hermann and Raymund, sons of GOTTFRIED CHRISTOPH. in the service of the Electoral court of Bonn. He was killed in a fire, 1777, when his wife was 28. A woman of refinement, common sense, and of irreproachable character, she devoted herself to her young family, to which Beethoven became music master in his 18th year.

Breve. It. A note twice the length of a semibreve, formerly the unit of mensuration, but now becoming obsolete, as its duration exceeds that of the longest measure now used. In mediæval church music it was really what its name signifies, "short," for it was half the length of the Longa, then used as the unit of measure. The direction Alla Breve now means that a piece must be played twice as fast as if simply marked common time.

Brides of Venice. Jules Benedict's two-act grand opera was produced April 22, 1844, at Covent Garden, London.

Bridge transfers the vibrations of the strings to the resonance box, and is of the utmost importance in instruments of the viol family, since its material, shape, and location affect the tone. The bridge raises the strings above the belly so they may be acted on by the bow, and likewise determines the upper end of the vibrating portion of the strings. The wooden bridge of the viols assumed its present form in the time of the Amatis. The bridge of instruments of the guitar, lute, and piano families merely determines the length of the vibrating portion of the strings, thus fixing their pitch.

C is the keynote of the natural scale, so called because it is the only one which can be written without sharps or flats. Middle C, so named because of its position in NOTATION, as well as on the keyboard of the piano, is the result of 261 vibrations in French or International pitch, and occupies the first line below the G or treble staff. In the staveless designation of notes adopted in this book and by most modern authorities, Middle C is indicated by c', that is lower case c with an accent. The upper octaves are marked by an additional accent for each octave, thus treble C becomes c'', its octave c''', etc. In descending from Middle C we find first the 4 foot, second or small octave, indicated by c, then the 8 foot, first or great octave, indicated by C; then the 16 foot or contra-octave indicated by 'C, etc. The modern scale of C corresponds to the ancient Ionian Mode and is identical with the XIth of the Ecclesiastical Modes. C likewise gives name to the alto or tenor CLEF, and to the minor key relative to E flat major. Cadeac (Pierre) composed masses, motets; master of choristers at Auch, 16th century.

Cadence is employed in music to bring a strain of melody or harmonic phrase to its rhetorical conclusion. A Perfect Cadence is one which first defines the key, sounding the dominant chord, then passes to the tonic chord, the only ending satisfying to the ear. A close or stop less satisfactory to the ear is produced when the tonic chord is followed by the dominant, and this is the most frequent form of the Imperfect Cadence. Where the chord of the dominant seems about to lead up to the tonic chord, but substitutes other harmony instead, as that of the submediant, an Interrupted Cadence results. The effect of the perfect cadence may be compared to that of a period; of an imperfect cadence to that of a dash; of an interrupted cadence to that of the comma. When the tonic chord is preceded by the major or minor chord of the subdominant the cadence is called Plagal. A cadence in two simple chords is a Simple Cadence; but when suspensions or other devices are introduced, becomes Compound. Bearing in mind these simple definitions, it will only be necessary to add that a Mixed Cadence is one in which both dominant and subdominant harmony are introduced immediately before the tonic chord, and that a Medial Cadence is merely an Inverted Cadence. The cadences of mediæval music were called "clausulae," and were subdivided into many classes, as Clausula Vera or true cadence; Clausula Plagalis or plagal cadence; Clausula Media, Ficta, Subsidiaria; or medial, false, or subsidiary cadence, etc. Clausula Vera was identical with the modern perfect cadence. In early English "fall" was synonymous with cadence; and it likewise means a running shake or trill, either in vocal or instrumental music, as a means of returning to a first subject, or of conclusion.

Canon. Gr. "Standard or rule." Formal imitation in music, in which the first part or subject or antecedent is repeated in the answer or consequent. Canons in which the same melody is sung by two voices an octave apart are called Two in One at the octave; when concluded are Finite Canons, but when leading back to the beginning, and therefore capable of interminable repetition, are termed Circular or Infinite. Where two canons are united in the same composition the result is called a Four in Two canon, and if there are eight parts singing the same theme it becomes a canon 8 in 1. A canon where the consequent is double the length of the antecedent is a Canon by Augmentation, and where the consequent is only half the length of the antecedent becomes a Canon by Diminution. Where a canon's consequent follows the inverted intervals of the antecedent it is a Canon by Inversion. Canons not written out but indicated by symbols or monograms are Indicated Canons or Enigmatical Canons. Canons completely written out were called Full or Aperto Canons. Canonical imitation with free accompaniment is frequently to be met with in classic music, but Canons Cancrizans, which might be played backward and even upside down, can hardly be considered art, however interesting for their display of ingenuity. The nomenclature of the canon may be continued by adding that the Sciolto is a free canon, the Chiuso a Close Canon, and the Al Sospiro a canon where the subject is answered the second beat of time.

based on Prosper Mérimée's story, was produced Mar. 3, 1875, at the Opéra Comique, Paris, and ranks with the most popular in modern repertoire. The first act represents a square in Seville, the cigarette factory to the right, to the left a guardhouse. Michaela enters seeking Don José, for whom she bears a message from his mother, but only sees Morales, for the Brigadier Don José and his officer, Zuniga, are in command of the guard. Presently the guard is relieved and the girls rush from the factory as noon strikes, followed by Carmen, who flirts with the men, and as she re-enters the factory, tosses a flower to José. Then Michaela returns, gives José a letter, money, and his mother's kiss, and he sends her home with loving messages, just as a riot breaks out in the factory. Carmen, in a fit of rage, has stabbed a girl, is arrested, and has her arms tied to prevent further mischief. Left alone with José, Carmen pleads for her release most seductively. He finally unties her hands, agrees to meet her at the house of Lillas-Pastia, and connives at her escape. Punished for his fault, José finds her two months later at Lillas-Pastia's, where she has been making merry with his superior Zuniga, a band of gipsy smugglers, and the toreador Escamillo. Carmen coquets with him, and urges him to run away with her and join the smugglers. Zuniga returns, orders José back to the barracks, reproaching Carmen for preferring a mere brigadier to an officer. José denounces his superior, and they are about to fight, when the gipsies disarm and bind Zuniga, and José prefers joining them with Carmen to another term in military prison. The third act represents a smuggler's camp. Carmen has tired of José, and wishes to rejoin the toreador. She runs the cards, finding her death foreshadowed. Escamillo, who has found her retreat, comes to claim her, but is obliged to fight José. They are separated by the gipsies, and Escamillo leaves, inviting Carmen to meet him at the bull fight in Seville. Michaela comes, telling José that his mother is dying of grief, and they go away together as the toreador's song is heard in the distance. The fourth act shows the entrance to the Seville bull-ring. A crowd escorts Escamillo through the gates, but as Carmen is about to enter, José stops her. Though warned by her gipsy friend Frasquita that José will kill her, she has no fear, and only laughs when he pleads his love and finally threatens her. Shouts from the bull-ring announce that Escamillo has again been victorious, and Carmen, with a cry of joy, moves toward the entrance, throwing at José a ring he had given her. In despair and rage, he stabs her, and Escamillo, returning from the arena with an admiring throng, finds José kneeling beside Carmen's corpse. At the first production Mme. Galli-Marie sang the title rôle, and the Michaela was Mlle. Chapuy. The principal music numbers are: Act I: the old Habanera "Amor, misterioso angelo," Carmen, mez. sop.; "La madre tua con me," Michaela, sop.; "Mia madre io la rivedo," Don José, ten.; the seguidilla "Presso il bastion di Seviglia," Carmen; Act II: "Vezzi eanella scintillar," Carmen and chorus; "Toreador, attento," Escamillo, bar.; "Abbiamo in vista," quintet; "Voglio danzar per tuo piacer," Carmen; "Il fior che avevi," Don José; Act III: "Mischiam! alziam!" terzetto; "Lo dico no, non son paurosa," Michaela; Act IV: Toreador's march.

Archbishop Cranmer is believed to have made the first adaptation of the Litany, and to have authorized the plain song to which it was to be chanted, and in John Marbecke's "Book of Common Praier noted," 1550, is a further musical adaptation of the Roman services. Henry VIII's Commissioners directed that the service be sung in a "plain, distinct and audible manner"; the singing or chanting of the liturgy is further authorized by rubric in the Prayer Book of Edward VI, and the use of song in church service was enjoined again by Elizabeth in the first year of her reign, 1559, who specified that "the same may be as playnely understood as if it were read without syngynge." During the Commonwealth the simplest form of psalm singing was encouraged, but the ornate musical accompaniment of worship was abolished. This drama of "rustic chivalry" is laid in a Sicilian village to which Turiddu, a young peasant, returns after his service in the army. In his absence Alfio, the carrier, has married Lola, with whom Turiddu was in love, and he consoles himself by playing the gallant to Santuzza. Lola again ensnares him, however, and his love for her is expressed in a beautiful Siciliana which is introduced in the overture. The rising curtain discloses a public square. Santuzza comes to the cottage of Lucia in search of her faithless lover, and is told that Turiddu has gone to Francofonte. Alfio comes in cracking his whip, singing the joys of the road and the fidelity of his wife Lola, and asks for wine. Lucia tells him that Turiddu has gone to the next village to buy some, but Alfio remembers to have seen him near his own cottage. Just then the Easter hymn is begun in the church, and the peasantry enter, leaving Lucia and Santuzza alone. The girl tells Turiddu's mother that she has been betrayed. Later, as Lucia enters the church, Turiddu appears, and Santuzza pleads with him to fulfil his promise of marriage, but he refuses. Lola is heard singing in the distance, and when she enters she taunts Santuzza while coquetting with Turiddu. She too goes into the church, and Turiddu, throwing Santuzza, who tries to detain him, to the ground, follows. Then Santuzza, mad with jealousy and despair, tells Alfio that Lola has deceived him, and he vows vengeance. After a beautiful intermezzo the action is resumed. The people are leaving church, and Turiddu invites his friends to join him in some wine. Alfio refuses, and then comes a challenge in Sicilian fashion, Turiddu biting Alfio's ear. Turiddu repents his folly, bids farewell to his mother, to whom he commends Santuzza, and rushes off to join Alfio in combat. A few moments later the peasants announce that Alfio has killed him. The principal musical numbers are the Siciliana "O Lola, c'hai dilatti," in the overture, Turiddu, ten.; "Il cavallo scalpita," Alfio, bar.; "Inneggiamo, il Signor," Santuzza, sop., and chorus; "Voi lo sapete, O mamma," Santuzza; "Fior di giuggolo," Lola, mez. sop.; the Intermezzo; and "Viva il vino," Turiddu. Chanson. Fr. Songs which are the French equivalent of the German lieder or English ballad, and like them are of all degrees of merit or demerit, reflecting the religious, political, and ethical status of the people among whom they were sung. Numerous classes of chansons may be grouped under four general heads, which seem to have been recognized by early French poets: chansons historique, de métier, d'amour, and bachique; and to these divisions may be added the chanson des rues, or street song.

Chant is the specific term for the musical rendering of a church service, although it also means "song" or "to sing," and is the French equivalent of song, tune, or vocal part. Ecclesiastical chants, whether Anglican, Gallican, Parisian, or of Cologne, are merely modifications of cantus firmi built upon GREGORIAN TONES. Anglican chant in John Marbecke's "Book of Common Praier noted" is an adaptation of the Roman ritualistic music to the first English versions of the service, 1550, and the Gregorian chants continued to be employed in Anglican churches until liturgical music was suppressed by Cromwell. With the accession of Charles II, chanting was resumed in Cathedrals, at least. The ancient chants have been more carefully studied since 1840, the result being numerous editions of Anglican service books, of which the most important in recent years is "The Cathedral Prayer Book." Reformed Churches on the Continent held chanting in dis-favour, like the English Puritans, preferring metrical versions of the psalms and other passages of scripture used in worship. Modern Anglican chants are either Single, consisting of a first strain of three and a second of four measures in length; or Double, having twice the length of a single chant. As originally sung in the Roman liturgy every syllable was sounded to a single note, and the Gregorian chant had five parts: the intonation, the first reciting note or dominant, the mediation, the second reciting note or dominant, and the ending. The Anglican chant eliminates the intonation, and permits several words to be chanted to the note, perfecting the rhythm. Fitting words to the music is called "pointing," and, in the absence of authority, editors have exercised their own discretion in pointing the psalter and canticles.

Cherubini (M. Luigi C. Z. S.) composed 15 Italian and 14 French operas, 17 cantatas, 11 masses, an oratorio, two requiems, a symphony, and chamber music; influenced the development of French composers during nearly half a century at the Paris Conservatoire; was esteemed the greatest living writer for the stage by Beethoven, and was the last great master of polyphonic style. His masterpieces were "Les DEUX JOURNÉES" ("The Water Carrier"), an opera which has held its own with German, French, and English audiences, and a celebrated Requiem in C minor. Son of the cembalist at the Pergola Theatre, Florence, Maria Luigi Carlo Zenobio Salvatore, to give his name in full, began to learn music from his father at six, and composition at nine. At 16 he had composed three cantatas, an oratorio, a Te Deum, three masses, two Dixits, a Miserere, a Magnificat, and other works, and at 17 the Archduke, afterwards Emperor Leopold II, sent him to study with Sarti, of Bologna, where he remained four years, thoroughly mastering counterpoint, and writing antiphons in imitation of those of Palestrina. In 1780 "Quinto Fabio," his first opera, was produced at Alessandria. From 1784 to 1786 he was in London, where his operas "La Finta Principessa" and "Giulio Sabino" were given. The next year he spent in Paris, then returned to Italy. His opera "Ifigenia in Aulide" was produced at Turin, after which he returned to Paris. His music had hitherto been modeled upon that of the Neapolitan dramatic composers, but in 1788 he produced "Démophon," to book by Marmontel, which proved a radical departure from existing conventions, marking out a style distinctly his own. He conducted the Italian opera at Paris, and when the Conservatoire was founded, became one of the inspectors of studies. The post was unsuitable, Cherubini was out of favour with Napoleon, and had contracted a marriage which was by no means happy, and in 1805 he was glad to accept a commission to write an opera for the Vienna Imperial Theatre. During a sojourn in that city he met Beethoven, whose admiration he does not seem to have returned, and produced the operas "Wasertrager" ("The Water Carrier" or "Deux Journées") and "Faniska." Shortly afterwards Napoleon captured Vienna, and Cherubini likewise. Mental anxieties broke down his health, and Cherubini went into retirement at the country seat of Prince Chimay. There he was asked to write a mass for the dedication of a church. The three-part mass in F resulted, 1809, and thereafter, while not wholly abandoning the stage, the composer devoted himself mainly to church music. On his return from Elba Napoleon gave Cherubini the cross of the Legion of Honor, and during the reign of Louis XVIII he became a member of the Institute, joint surintendant of the king's music, and finally director of the Conservatoire, a post he held until his death. Other works to be noted are "Marguerite d'Anjou," "Lodoïska," "Koukourgi" (altered, expanded, and renamed "Ali Baba"); "Elisa," "Médée," operas; the ballet operas "Anacreon" and "Achille a Scyros"; the later operas, "Pimmallione," "Le Crescendo," and "Abencérages," and "Ali Baba"; symphony in D for London Philharmonic Society; the masses in F, D minor, A flat; the Solemn Mass in C, the Requiem in C minor, and the Requiem in D minor for male voices. B. Florence, Sept. 14, 1760; d. Paris, Mar. 15, 1842. See biography: Edward Bellasis, London, 1874; "Derniers souvenirs d'un musicien," Adolphe Adam, 1859.

Chester Musical Festival was founded 1772 under the direction of Dr. William Hayes, conductor, and Mr. Orme, the Cathedral organist.

Festivals were continued at irregular intervals until 1829, when they ceased, to be revived 50 years later by Dr. Bridge, since which time they have been given triennially with great artistic success.

Chevé (Armand) directed the École Galin-Paris-Chevé, in Paris, which is devoted to teaching sight singing and sight reading by means of a numerical notation combined with sol-fa. Jean Jacques Rousseau was first to suggest the numeral system of notation, and his theories were adapted to practical use by Pierre Galin, a Bordeaux teacher of mathematics, 1786-1821. Aimé Paris, Galin's pupil, devised the special nomenclature which has grown into the Tonic Sol-Fa system, 1798-1866. Émile Chevé, a physician who married a sister of Paris, wrote an account of the system "Méthode Élémentaire de la Musique Vocale," and the vigorous propaganda that followed resulted in the introduction of the method in the schools of Paris and many other cities.

Chevillard (Pierre Alexander François) played and taught 'cello in the Paris Conservatoire, and founded the "Société des derniers quatuors de Beethoven," 1835. B. Antwerp, Jan. 15, 1811; d. Chicago traced its eminence in music to 1891, when Theodore THOMAS was brought from Cincinnati with the majority of his players to found the Chicago Orchestra, now known in his memory as the Thomas Orchestra. For many years the concerts of this organization were given in the Chicago Auditorium, which was, in the opinion of competent judges, one of the best, as well as the largest of theatres suitable for musical performances in America. It is to be noted with regret that the directors of the Auditorium Association, finding this house unprofitable, proposed to remodel it in 1909 for hotel or business purposes. At first the Chicago orchestra numbered 60 men, and concerts were given twice each week for a comparatively short season. In 1901 the orchestra was enlarged to 90, and the patronage of the concerts had so increased as to justify plans for the erection of a Symphony Hall. Mr. Thomas survived long enough to conduct the first concerts in the orchestra's new home, and on his decease Frederick A. STOCK became conductor. In 1908-9 biweekly concerts were planned for a season of 22 weeks, and in addition there were occasional tournees. Chicago is the seat of many educational institutions. The American Conservatory of Music was authorized by a charter of the state of Illinois to confer certificates and the degree Bachelor of Music, the latter on completion of a post graduate course. It professed to give the most thorough course of study in the art of music that could be found in America. The Conservatory was founded in 1886 by John J. Hattstaedt, who was its president and head of the piano department in 1908. Other members of the faculty then were: Piano: Victor Garwood, Allen Spencer, Henriot Levy, Silvio Scionti, Jennette Loudon, Effie Murdock, Ida Kaehler, Lillian W. Bradley was the director in 1908. Chicago Musical College was founded 1869, and in 1908 included, besides all branches of music, schools of acting, opera, of expression, and of modern languages. In that year Dr. Ziegfeld was president, and the board of musical directors included William Castle, Hugo Heerman, Bernhard Listemann, Dr. Louis Falk, Herman Devries, Hans von Schiller, Felix Borowski, Ernesto Consolo, Mrs. O. H. Fox, and J. H. Gilmour. Of the many important singing societies called Apollo Club one of the largest and most important is domiciled in Chicago. In 1908 the musical director was Harrison M. Wild.

Chickering (Jonas) founded the first important American piano factory, 1823. B. New Ipswich, N. H., 1798; d. Boston, 1853. Col. Thomas E. C. took first prize at the Paris Exposition of 1867 with an improved piano; became Chevalier of the Legion of Honor; continued the piano business. B. Boston, 1824; d. 1871. Chopin (François Frédéric) composed piano music unsurpassed for perfection in style, rich singing quality, and originality; played with a delicacy combined with poetic fervour which distinguished him above the other great pianists of his generation, developing a style of piano technique in which "everything must be made to sing" instead of aiming chiefly at orchestral effect. Son of Nicholas Chopin, who had gone from Nancy to Poland, becoming first bookkeeper in a snuff factory, afterwards a captain in the National Guard, and finally a teacher of French, in the Warsaw Lyceum, Chopin inherited from his mother, born Justine Kryzanowska, much of the temperament of his native land, for which he ever retained a patriotic devotion. Adalbert Zywny was his first teacher, and he first appeared in concert at nine, and as a composer at 11. At 12 he entered the Warsaw conservatory, studying with Joseph Elsner, and at 14 his rondo in C minor was published as Op. 1. The variations on "La ci darem," Op. 2, the trio for piano and strings, Op. 8, the sonata, Op. 4, the E minor nocturne, and the polonaises in G minor, D minor, and B flat were composed before he was 19, at which time he first visited Berlin. In 1829 he gave successful concerts in Vienna, and after a brief sojourn at Warsaw, departed on a concert tour in 1830, which included Breslau, Dresden, Prague, Vienna, Munich, and Stuttgart, but which proved a financial failure. In the latter city he composed the etude in C minor, Op. 10, No. 12, believed to have been inspired by his grief at the capture of Warsaw by the Russians. Debarred by physical frailties from fighting for Poland, Chopin henceforth regarded himself as an exile, and made his home in Paris, where the misfortunes of his country caused him to be received with great cordiality. In 1832 Chopin gave his first concert in Paris, and although embarrassed at first by want of money, soon established himself as a teacher and concert pianist. He formed the acquaintance of the leading musicians of the period, including Bellini, Cherubini, and Meyerbeer, but does not appear to have won the regard of either Liszt or Berlioz. However, Schumann reviewed some of his compositions with the eulogy "Hats off, gentlemen! a genius!" and his music soon acquired a ready sale in Germany. In 1835, Chopin visited Carlsbad, where he saw his parents; Dresden and Leipsic, in the latter city meeting Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Clara Wieck. The following year he again toured Germany, and in 1837 made his first visit to England, where he consulted a physician regarding the pulmonary troubles which finally resulted in his death, and where he likewise arranged for the publication of his music by Wessel & Co. 1837 was memorable for the beginning of his liason with Mme. Dudevant (George Sand), to whom he had been introduced by Liszt, and with whom he went to Majorca in the fall of 1838. Chopin's disease had progressed to an alarming stage by this time. He was naturally a sentimentalist, morbid, frail, of almost effeminate delicacy, while Mme. Dudevant was robust, masculine, and of virile intellect. The union of two such opposing natures could only result in unhappiness for both, but each found in the other a fertile source of "copy." George Sand's impressions of the pianist are recorded in "Un Hiver à Majorque," the "Histoire de ma Vie," and "Lucrezia Floriani"; while those of Chopin found expression in his preludes, Op. 28, and other works. They returned to France in the spring of 1839, spending their summers at Nohant, their winters in Paris, until 1847, when they separated after a bitter quarrel, the shock of which may have hastened the composer's end. On the outbreak of the Revolution of 1848, Chopin went to England, where he gave a number of concerts, although so weak he had to be carried into the concert room. In the fall he visited Scotland, but his concerts failed to arouse enthusiasm, and in 1849 he returned to Paris, where he died, and was buried at the Père-la-Chaise, after an elaborate funeral service attended by all the musicians of the French capital, at which Mozart's Requiem was sung. B. Zelazowa Wola, near Warsaw, Mar. 1, 1809; d. Oct. 17, 1849. See Nieck's "Life," London, 1888; Hunneker's "Chopin," New York, 1900. Chor. Ger. Chorus.

Choragus. Gr. Chorus leader in ancient Greek drama; titular musical official in Oxford University, Eng.

Choral. Pertaining to the chorus or choir.

Chorale. Ger. "Hymn tunes." With the substitution of German for Latin in church services by Martin Luther and his followers, it was found that melodies in rhythmic music were more popular with the people than the old Gregorian church music, so, while the older music was retained in some instances, secular tunes were often adapted to hymns, and new tunes and new hymns were evolved by the Protestant leaders. Luther wrote many hymns and hymn tunes himself, the most famous being "Ein feste Burg," which is reproduced in the works of Bach, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, and Wagner; and in 1524 he published a collection of hymns, with Walther, known as the "Erfurt Enchiridion." Elaboration of chorales into contrapuntal works with organ accompaniment, practised by Johann Sebastian Bach and a host of lesser musicians, gave rise to a distinctive school of German organists and composers, and has had an important influence on all modern German music.

Choral Fantasia. Ludwig van Beethoven's composition first performed Dec. 22, 1808, at the Theatre an den Wien, Vienna, foreshadowed the Choral Symphony. It is in C minor, scored for solo piano, orchestra, solo quartet, and chorus.

The work was probably begun by Beethoven as early as 1817, although he had thought of setting Schiller's "Ode to Joy," which forms the text, as early as 1792.

Choral Vicars. Lay vicars who supervise music in Anglican cathedrals.

Chord. Several musical sounds in combination whether dissonant or consonant, as the chord of the dominant, the common chord, the chord of the

Many of the privileges belonging to choristers in England, such as educational facilities, the right to exact certain fees and to elect "boy bishops" have disappeared, but the tendency to assume entire control of the physical, mental, and moral well being of the chorister is beginning to assert itself again in the English Cathedrals. The office of chorister has assumed additional importance in Catholic countries of late years since the promulgation of musical reforms and a return to the strict Gregorian style. Any number of choristers have achieved places of distinction in church and state, and from Palestrina and Bach, to Dr. Burney and Sir Arthur Sullivan, hundreds of eminent musicians obtained their first instruction as choristers.

Chorley (Henry Fothergill) wrote "Modern German Music," 1854; "Thirty Years Musical Recollections," 1862; "Handel Studies," 1859; "National Music of the World," 1880 (posth.), and music criticism for the London "Athenæum" from 1830 to

Chorton. Obsolete pitch to which organs were tuned, higher than pitch for secular music.

Chorus. Those who sing the choruses, whether in opera, oratorio, concert, or in church. In ancient Greece the chorus was composed of men and women who recited comment and explanatory text on the action as presented by the principal actors. The first operas were an attempt at reviving the classic tragedy, and a similar duty again devolved upon the chorus, which was ranged upon the stage in two rows, and took no part in the action. Gluck was the first operatic composer to employ the chorus in such a manner as to make the singers part of the dramatic personæ, contributing to the action of the piece. Choruses may be written in any number of parts. Bach sometimes wrote for chorus in unison, Handel generally for four-part chorus in his oratorios, and Tallis composed a motet in 40 parts. Choruses are often divided into choirs, and there are masses in the Italian style for 10 and 12 choirs of four voices each. The burden or refrain of a song is called its chorus. The term was once employed as equivalent to the modern word ensemble.

Chorus was the name of an obsolete instrument of the bagpipe family, and is also the name of the mixture and compound organ stops.

the Paris music publishing house known as Choudens fils, June, 1845. D. 1888, when the business passed to his son Paul.

Chimène demands vengeance of King Ferdinand IV, but is counselled to wait, as Rodrigue's services are needed to repel a Moorish invasion. Cincinnati College of Music teaches vocal and orchestral music, composition, and is the oldest of endowed music schools in the United States, having been founded in 1872 through the liberality of Reuben Springer and other wealthy citizens. Its property adjoins the great Music Hall, the organ of which is available for students, and besides a number of class rooms and a large dormitory, offices, etc., it possesses in the Odeon an excellent auditorium for chamber music, and a smaller hall for recital purposes. The property is worth about $1,500,000, and is administered by a board of trustees. Theodore Thomas was the first director, and he assembled an unusually able teaching corps. The heads of the violin department have been successively JACOBSON, HENRY SCHRADIECK, Leandro CAMPANARI, and Jose Marien. Albino GORNO headed the piano department almost from the beginning; Otto Singer taught theory, and the heads of the vocal department have been Bush W. FOLEY, Tecla Vigna, Lino Mattioli. Upon the removal of Theodore Thomas to Chicago the management of the college devolved upon President Peter Rudolph Neff, and upon his retirement, in 1896, Frank van der STUCKEN became director. Pietro FLORIDIA, A. J. GANTVOORT, Gisela L. Weber, Louis Victor SAAR, and Romeo Gorno were members of the faculty in 1908, and the retirement of Mr. Van der Stucken left executive administration with the president, ex-Mayor Fleischmann. Cincinnati Conservatory teaches music in all branches, possesses a handsome establishment in the suburb "Mt. Auburn," with equipment for boarding pupils from a distance, and has always ranked with the largest and best of private musical institutions. It was founded 1867 by Miss Clara Bauer, who was the directress in 1908, and employs a large staff of teachers, including Cav. Pier Adolfo TIRINDELLI, Theodore BOHLMANN, Frederic Shailer Evans, Malton Boyce, and Frances Moses. Cincinnati Festival was for many years the most important biennial music festival in America, notable alike for the excellence of the performance of standard choral and orchestral works, for the high reputation of the soloists, and the number of new works first made known. An outgrowth of a large festival given by German singing societies in 1849 at which the North American Sängerbund was organized, the Cincinnati Festival was established in 1873 with Theodore THOMAS as conductor, his orchestra as the nucleus of the instrumental organization, and a chorus of 1250 singers made up of 29 societies. The concerts differed from those of the German singers in giving prominence to orchestral works, and in singing to English texts. Later a permanent May Festival chorus was organized, and since 1878 the festivals have been held in the great Music Hall. Mr. Thomas retained the direction of the festivals, and his orchestra continued to be their main instrumental support until his death. Frank van der Stucken succeeded to the post of director, and conducted the May Festival of 1908. Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, founded by an organization of women presided over by Mrs. William H. Taft, (Helen Herron), became the legitimate successor of several orchestral bodies in the performance of symphonic music. On the withdrawal of Theodore Thomas to Chicago some of the musicians who had played in his orchestra preferred to remain in Cincinnati, the chiefs of the various choirs being attached in many instances to the Cincinnati College of Music. They organized the Cincinnati Orchestra, the best known conductor of which was Michael Brand, who had been 1st 'cello with Mr. Thomas, and gave a series of concerts, including an excellent "popular" series on Sunday afternoons. While head of the violin department at the College, Henry Schradieck gave symphony concerts with an orchestra composed of advanced instrumental students and members of the faculty, assisted by musicians from the Cincinnati Orchestra; after his departure there came a time when serious orchestral music was heard no more. This want was supplied by the association of women, who obtained pledges for the support of a series of symphony concerts, employing the best musicians in the Cincinnati Orchestra, and engaging a few additional men from abroad. There were several conductors during the first season of 1894-5, but in 1895-6 Frank van der Stucken was engaged as conductor, and, although it proved a difficult matter to obtain funds with which to meet an annual deficit, the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra bid fair to become a permanent institution. Unfortunately the "Symphony Orchestra Association Co." became involved in a controversy with the musicians' union during the season of 1906-7, and the orchestra, still under the baton of Mr. Van der Stucken, while the Association had for its president Mrs. C. R. Holmes, was disbanded in April, 1907. In that season the receipts had been $49,794.41, leaving a deficit of only $10,056.45, which the supporters of the association defrayed. Such orchestral music as Cincinnati enjoyed during 1907-8 was furnished chiefly by visiting organizations.

Clarinet. Woodwind instrument closely corresponding to the violin in compass and of great importance in modern orchestras, was probably an improvement on the ancient shawm or chalumeau, devised by Denner in Nuremberg about 1690. It differs from the oboe in having a single instead of a double reed, and in being cylindrical rather than conical and thus having a twelfth instead of an octave as its first overtone. It is a stopped pipe, having a mouthpiece and bell, with twenty sideholes, of which thirteen are controlled by keys, the rest stopped with fingers and thumb.

There are four registers, the lowest of rich contralto quality being known as the "chalumeau or schalmei" and ranging from g to e'. The transition to the next register above is difficult, as the player must increase the wind pressure, and this register, the medium, ranges from f' to b' flat (included with the chalumeau in orchestration, and marked chal.), while the clarion register from which the instrument is named ranges from b' to c'', and the superacute or highest register from d''' to c'''. The two upper registers are indicated in scores by the abbreviation "clar." The length of the tube determines the instrument's scale, thus the shorter clarinet is in C, a longer in B flat and a still longer one in A. Complicated scales for one instrument become simple on another, and the compass is extended by having instruments in different keys. A shrill toned instrument useful in military bands is set in E flat, and there are clarinets in D, E, F, and A flat. The instrument in F is the tenor clarinet, also known as Bass Horn, Corno di Bassetto or Alto Clarinet. Bass clarinets, sounding an octave below the ordinary instruments are usually set in B flat or A. Johann Christian Bach is said to have first employed the clarinet as a regular orchestral instrument in 1763, but it remained for Mozart to give it permanence and importance.

Clavichord. Obsolete instrument for which Johann Sebastian Bach wrote his "Wohltemperirtes Clavier," thus enforcing the practicability of Equal TEMPERAMENT tuning; which Beethoven preferred among all keyed instruments; and which Mozart played, was not unlike a square piano in appearance, but differed in principle, being a development of the monochord. The strings were set in vibration by tangents which at the same time fixed their vibrating lengths, the shorter vibrating portion being immediately damped by an interlaced band of cloth. The tone produced was faint but sweet, and could be swelled or diminished at the will of the performer. In the earlier instruments one set of strings was made to serve for two or more notes, F sharp being produced on the F string, for example, by a tangent stopping that string at shorter length. In Bach's time, however, the clavichord was made "bundfrei," that is without frets, each pair of strings for the chromatic scale having its own tangent. A clavichord dated 1537 may be seen in the Metropolitan Museum, New York. Some of the later instruments were made with two or more keyboards or manuals, and with pedal notes as well.

Piron, Crébillon fils, and Collé, French song writers, formed a club in 1733, which dined in the Café le Caveau, and the meeting place gave the name to many later organizations of a like nature, and from these clubs came the name of the collection, which embraces 2350 songs.

Clefs are the characters employed in NOTATION to indicate absolute pitch, and, in modern music, are three in number, being modified forms of the letters C, G, and F, from which they take their names. On whatever line it may be placed, the C clef or tenor clef (Soprano, German Soprano, Alto, Mean, Counter Tenor clef) indicates c', and the purpose in altering the position of the letter on the staff is to bring as many notes as possible within the staff, thus avoiding ledger lines. The G clef or treble of the piano indicates g' and is placed on the second line of the staff. The F or bass clef of the piano indicates f and occupies the fourth line of the staff. Placed on the third line it becomes the baritone clef. In ancient music two other clefs were employed, a D clef indicating d'' and the gamut clef from the Greek gamma, indicating G. Both have become obsolete.

Son of a goldsmith with a taste for music who placed him under Buroni, choirmaster in a Roman church, he became a pupil of Cordicelli in 1759. When 14 he composed a mass which aroused the admiration of Peter Beckford, M.P., who took him to his country home in Dorsetshire, Eng., to perfect himself in his studies. In 1770 Clementi gave brilliantly successful concerts in London, and from 1777 to 1780 was cembalist at the Italian Opera, London. During the following year he toured Europe, having the famous encounter with Mozart in Vienna. Thereafter his home was in England, although he made occasional concert tours of the continent. terest, he founded a new publishing house and recouped his losses. From 1810 he devoted himself to his business, composing only in leisure moments. B. Rome, 1752; m. daughter of J. G. G. Lehmann, cantor of Berlin Nicolaiikirche, 1804; d. Mar. 10, 1832, Evesham, Eng.

Instruction was given, from the first, in the history and criticism of music, and in harmony, counterpoint, and composition. In 1904 Prof. MacDowell withdrew from Columbia University, and Cornelius RUBNER was elected to succeed him. With Professor Rübner is associated Leonard B. McWHOOD (formerly assistant to Prof. MacDowell) as Adjunct Professor, these two constituting the entire faculty in 1908. The original lines of instruction have been broadened and enlarged since the foundation of the department, and some practical courses in ear-training and in orchestral and choral performance added. Individual instruction in musical performance has never been undertaken. The courses in music may be counted toward the academic degrees (Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science) as well as toward the degrees in music (Bachelor of Music, Master of Arts in Music, and Doctor of Philosophy in Music). In addition, music may be presented as a subject for examination by a candidate for admission to the Academic College or to the School of Music.

B. April 18, 1819, Bordeaux; d. Paris, Jan. 24, 1898.

Comic Opera in the broadest sense is one in which the incidents and dialogues are humorous, but the name is sufficiently elastic to include the form-less "creations" which are dependent upon the costumier and ballet master rather than music for their chief interest. The term might, with propriety, be restricted to works of the Gilbert and Sullivan type. The earliest comic opera still extant is "Le jeu de Robin et Marion" of ADAM DE LA HALE, first performed at the French court in Naples, 1285, rescored for modern orchestra and performed at Arras, 1896. Opéra comique as it developed in France consisted of dramatic pieces with music and dancing and instrumental accompaniment, often along tragic rather than comic lines, like the German singspiel, all or nearly all the dialogue being spoken; differing from the Italian opera buffa, which is sung throughout, never spoken. Exceptions to the last statement will be found in occasional opera buffa modelled on the French style.

Comma. The interval between a major and minor tone, the ratio being 80:81 in the common comma or comma of Didymus. The Pythagorean comma or comma maxima is the difference resulting from tuning up from the same tone 12 perfect fifths and seven octaves.

Commer (Franz) composed music to "The Frogs" of Aristophanes and "Electra" of Sophocles; edited important collections of music; founded the Berlin Tonkünstlerverein in 1844, jointly with Kullak; librarian to Königlische Musik-Institut and choir-master St. Hedwig's Church, Berlin. Commodamente. It. Easily, quietly.

Commodo. It. "Easily or at convenient speed."

Common Chord. A tone and its major or minor third and perfect fifth.

Common Time has two beats or any multiple of two beats to the measure. Simple Common Time includes all rhythms of two or four, as 4-4 or 2-4. Compound Common Time is where the value of each beat is three quavers or crotchets although the number of beats be even as 6-4, 6-8, 12-8. In ancient notation a circle O meant

"tempus perfectum," which had three semibreves to the measure. A semi-circle C meant "tempus imperfectum," which had two semibreves to the measure, and this sign has been retained in modern notation for alla capella time or tempo ordinario, which generally has four minims to the bar and is played or sung slowly. If a vertical line is drawn through the C it indicates alla breve time or four minims to the measure played twice as fast.

Communion Service. In the Anglican Church in which the Communion Service is a translation or rather an adaptation of the MASS, the English words were originally sung to the music already familiar from having been employed with the Latin ritual, and the services edited by Marbeck and Tallis were noted in full. Music in the Anglican Church gradually decreased in importance with the growth of the Puritan movement, practically ceased to exist during the Commonwealth except in Psalmody, and although restored by Charles II, was rarely heard throughout a service except in the Chapel Royals and Cathedrals and Collegiate Churches until about 1840, when a renewed interest in ritualistic music was manifested, which has resulted in a careful revision of the older music for the Communion Service, and many new compositions.

Compagnia del Gonfalone, founded at Rome in 1264, played sacred dramas with music, or "miracles" which may have suggested the later ORATORIOS.

Company of Musicians established by letters patent issued by Edward IV in 1472 as "a perpetual guild or fraternity and sisterhood of minstrels" (musicians qualified to sing or play in public), and chartered by James I, July 8, 1604, controlled the exercise of the musical profession in London, and appears to have been the English prototype of the modern musicians' unions.

Compass. The range of sound of which a voice or instrument is capable.

Compère (Loyset) composed church music and songs; distinguished pupil of Okeghem; chorister, canon, and chancellor of the St. Quentin Cathedral; d. Aug. 16, 1518.

Compiacevole. It. Pleasant, agreeable.

Complement is whatever interval added to another interval will complete an octave.

Compline completes the Horae Diurnae of the Latin breviary and follows the vesper service, with or without pause. The Latin term is "Completorium."

Composer. An author of music.

Composition. An invention in music whether for voices, instruments, or both in combination. Literally "a putting together." The art of writing music according to scientific rules.

Composition Pedals were of two kinds, single action, by which an organist could throw out or draw in certain stops, and double action, which not only threw out a certain number of stops but drew in all the rest. Prior to Bishop's invention of these pedals a shifting pedal was employed permitting a change from the "great" or "loud" to the "choir" or "small" organ.

Composizione. It. Composition. Di Tavolino, table music.

Compound Intervals are those greater than an octave, those less than an octave being called simple.

Compound Stops are those which control more than one rank of organ pipes.

Compound Time is the rhythm formed by combining two, three, or four measures of simple time, and besides the principal accent on the first note of each measure, has subordinate accents on each group of notes. It is common or triple according to the number of groups in each measure: thus 6-8 consisting of two measures of 3-8, and 12-8, consisting of four measures of 3-8 time are common; 9-8, consisting of three measures of 3-8, and 9-4 consisting of three measures of 3-4 are triple.

Comte Ory. Gioacchino Rossini's two-act opera to book by Scribe and Delestre-Poirson, both score and text being adaptations of earlier works by the same men, was produced Aug. 20, 1828, at the Paris Académie Royale.

Con. It. "With," as con Anima, with spirit; con Amore, with affection; con Sordini, with mutes; con Brio, with life and fire.

Conacher & Co. built organs in Huddersfield, Eng., beginning in 1854.

Concutores Sodales founded by William Horsley, the organist, Dr. Callcott and other London musicians, 1798, met in various taverns and sang canons, glees, and madrigals composed by the members. Disbanded, 1847.

Concentus. L. Harmony or part music; consonance.

Concert. A performance of music of a miscellaneous character, to which the public is admitted by payment, is the modern acceptation of a term which seems to have originally referred to several instruments playing one tune in unison or to a set of viols or other instruments. Famous concerts of the world's music centres and the organizations which give them are referred to under the names of the cities to which they belong.

Concert. Ger. Concerto.

Concertante. It. Composition suitable for concert performance; music for two or more instruments with solo parts.

Concerted Music. Vocal or instrumental music for two or more performers.

Concertina. Portable free reed instrument of hexagonal form, invented by Sir Charles Wheatstone, 1829, consisting of a bellows with keyboard at either extremity, made in treble, tenor, bass, and doublebass sizes with a combined range from G' to g'''. The German instrument of the same name, unlike the English, produces different tones by inspiratory and expiratory action, and is tuned in one key.

Concertino. Solo instruments required in the performance of a CONCERTO GROSSO; a diminutive concerto in freer form than a concerto, and often having a single movement.

Concertista. It. Virtuoso.

Concertmeister. Ger. The first violin and leader of the orchestra.

Concerto. It. An instrumental composition in three movements based upon the sonata form and serving to display the performer's skill, with orchestral accompaniment. Concertos for more than one solo instrument are known as double, triple, quadruple, as the case may be. Originally the term was applied to vocal compositions with organ accompaniment termed concerti ecclesiastici or concerti da chiesa or church concertos. A "concerto da camera" for two violins and bass published in 1685 by Giuseppe Torelli was the model upon which the CONCERTI GROSSI of Corelli, Geminiani, and Vivaldi were based, and to which Bach and Handel adhered. Mozart crystallized the form of the concerto as it is known to-day, giving larger prominence to the orchestra, which, however, was still chiefly confined to accompaniment. The introduction of cadenzas by performers led Mozart to write 35 cadenzas for his own concerti, an example which Beethoven followed. With Beethoven the orchestral part in the concerto assumed symphonic proportions, and the composers succeeding him have conformed to his ideas in this respect. Brahms has even gone to the extreme in his D minor concerto of deferring the entrance of the piano until the orchestra has played 91 measures. Exceptions to the definition given in the first sentence of this article may be noted in Liszt's "Concert Pathétique," which is for two pianos without orchestra, and in Litolff's Concert-Symphonie for piano and orchestra in E flat, which introduces a scherzo as the third of four movements.

Concerto Grosso. Composition for two or more solo instruments and orchestra in several movements, analogous to overtures and suites.

Concerto Spirituale. It. Sacred concert.

Concert Pitch is usually higher than A at 435 double vibrations per second or French diapason normal, because that pitch is estimated at a temperature of 59 degrees F. and the temperature of a concert room is much warmer.

Concertspieler. Ger. Soloist concerto player.

Concertstück. Ger. Concert piece; concerto.

Concha. L. Triton's horn or shell-shaped trumpet; conch.

Concitato. It. Agitated; disturbed.

Concone (Giuseppe) composed vocal music and soffeggi; taught in Paris; chapelmaster and organist at the Chapel Royal, Turin. B. 1810, Turin; d. June 1, 1861.

Concord combines notes which give the ear complete satisfaction, such as perfect fifths and major and minor sixths and thirds, their octaves, and combinations of them not involving other intervals. Other concords recognized in HARMONY may be produced by placing concordant notes below those which would otherwise be discordant.

Condell (Henry) composed "The Enchanted Isle," a ballet, farces, and other dramatic music and the prize glee "Loud Blowe the Wyndes"; played violin at London Opera, Covent Garden, and Drury Lane. B. 1757; d. June 24, 1824.

Conducting has grown in importance with the evolution of the orchestra and the increasing number of parts and of performers until the conductor has virtually become a soloist and the musicians under him an instrument, with this difference, that the conductor's instrument is instinct with life, and with intelligence—more or less—and should therefore be capable of quicker response and more subtle expression than any of the solo instruments designed for big tonal effects. Almost any one can beat time, just as almost any one can sing, but great conductors are still more rare than great singers, since the many qualities which must be combined in the "prima donna conductor" are seldom realized in one person. Primarily the conductor must set the tempo for the orchestra or chorus or both. In this he will have the guidance of the composer's indicated intention so far as language and notation give it, generally supplemented by the metronome, by tradition, and also by such enlightenment as may be had through careful study of the work to be performed. This knowledge he must be able to impart to the musicians under him in the clearest and most decisive manner. Every motion of the baton should mean something, every gesture should give direction, for it is necessary, as Wagner suggested, that the musicians be taught to look for the melody in every bar, and then sing it. In obtaining delicate effects in light and shade, and in rubato, the conductor has the same right to discretion which the pianist has always claimed and often abused. He may likewise accord certain liberties to his musicians in extended solo passages, for it has been repeatedly observed that an orchestra in which the conductor drills his men with too much severity loses in brilliancy. Above all, possessing knowledge of music and interpretive talent in the highest degree, the conductor must know how to command men, for it is more difficult to keep an assemblage of musicians in the proper mood for the best work than to tune a violin or even a piano. Perfect understanding between conductor and musicians is absolutely essential to the best results, and it need hardly be added that such understanding can only be arrived at in a permanent orchestra. In mediæval music where chorus and orchestra were alike of small proportions a conductor in the modern sense was no more necessary than in chamber music at present. In early French opera time was beaten by rapping a long baton or stick on the floor, and in Rousseau's day the baton had been shortened in length and was beaten against the conductor's desk. In Beethoven's youth it was part of his duty as cembalist at the Bonn opera to give the time, and Bach habitually directed while playing organ. But while conducting may have been practised in the modern sense in the Sistine Chapel at Rome as early as the 16th century, it remained for Mendelssohn, while at the head of the Gewandhaus concerts in Leipsic to establish the importance of the conductor's office, and his influence grew paramount in matter of interpretation until a new school grew up with such leaders as Wagner, von Bülow, Seidl, and Richter, whose successors in the present generation have been Niskisch, Weingartner, Mottl, Muck, and Mahler. See: "Le Chef d'Orchestre," Hector Berlioz, Paris, 1848, for diagrams of various beats, arrangement of orchestra, conducting in theatre, etc.; "Ueber das Dirigiren," Richard Wagner, 1869, Eng. trans. by Dannreuther, 1887; "Ueber das Dirigiren," Felix Weingartner, 1896, dealing with use and abuse of tempo rubato; Carl Schröder, "Handbook on Conducting," Eng. trans., London, 1891.

Conductor's Part. Condensation of a score on two staves, giving the entrances of the various instruments in proper order.

Conductus. Obsolete 13th century polyphonic music in from one to four parts sometimes sung without words, in which the cantus firmus was of secular not church origin.

Conduit. Fr. Wind trunk.

Cone Gamba. Bell gamba.

Conforti (Giovanni Luca) wrote "Passaggi sopra tutti i salmi," which gives vocal ornaments for use in church service. B. Mileto, 1560; joined the Papal choir at Rome, Nov. 4, 1591.

Confrérie de St. Julien was composed of musicians who settled in Paris about 1330, formed a guild for self-protection at a time when the art of the troubadour or minstrel had ceased to be fashionable, and monopolized secular music in France until the reign of Louis XIV. In 1658 that monarch confirmed the privileges which had been granted the Confrérie by his ancestors, but two years later his majesty desired to hear the performance of a new work by Jean Baptiste Lulli, and the Confrérie having grown so negligent of its art as to be unable to comply, Lulli was commissioned to organize the band of 24 men known as "Le Petits violons du Roi." This was the beginning of the Confrérie's decline, and it was suppressed in 1761.

Congregational Music. That sung in church by the people as opposed to that sung by a trained choir.

Conjunct. In GREEK MUSIC a combination of Hexachords; notes close together.

Conradi (August) composed the opera "Rübezahl," five symphonies, dance music; conducted in Dusseldorf, Cologne, and Berlin theatres; played organ. B. June 27, 1821, Berlin; d. May 26, 1873, Berlin.

Conradi (Johann Georg) composed the operas "Ariane," "Diogenes," and "Numa Pompilius," 1691; "Jerusalem," 1692; "Sigismund," "Geneserius," and "Pygmalion," 1693; chapelmaster at Oettingen, Bavaria.

Conried, Ritter von (Heinrich) became impresario at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, 1903, made a notable production of "Parsifal," the first to be given outside the Festspielhaus in Bayreuth; produced Richard Strauss's "Salome," 1907, but was compelled to withdraw it by the owners of the opera house. Apprenticed to a weaver in Vienna as a boy, he was fired with ambition to become an actor, and, on mastering his trade, obtained employment at the Vienna theatres in a minor capacity. After acquiring some reputation as a comedian, he left Vienna for New York, where he soon assembled a small company of German players about him. In 1887 he obtained a lease of the Irving Place Theatre, which speedily became famous for the excellence of its ensemble at a time when the English houses were dominated by the star system. It was due the merit of the performances there given that the Metropolitan Opera House Realty Co., owners of the building, installed him as manager in succession to Maurice Grau, who retired because of ill health. 1905 he received a decoration from Franz Leopold carrying the right to the prefix "von," and received the honorary degree of M.A. from Harvard, and was made honorary member of the board for Germanic language and literature at Harvard and Vassar. In 1907 Mr. von Conried was afflicted with a nervous disorder which threatened to make him a permanent invalid, and on the advice of his physicians he retired from the management of the Opera on the conclusion of the season 1907-8, giving way to Messrs. Andreas DIPPEL and GATTI-CASAZZA. Mr. von Conried had previously retired from the management of the Irving Place Theatre, and in the fall of 1908 was endeavouring to regain his health in Europe and was at the same time engaged in writing his memoirs. B. Sept. 13, 1855, Bielitz, Silesia; d. Meran, Austria, Apr. 27, 1909.

Consecutives. The progression of parallel fifths or octaves, although occasionally exemplified in the works of the great composers, is forbidden by theorists. Consecutive fifths necessarily move in different keys, and doubling octaves, unless to strengthen a melody temporarily, would be throwing away a part in vocal music or string quartets, which could ill be spared.

Consento. It. Harmony; notes of a chord sounded together as opposed to arpeggio.

Consequent. The answer to a fugue subject.

Conservatoire National de Musique et de Declamation, referred to in this work as the Paris Conservatoire had its beginning in the École Royale de Chant, opened in 1784 by Gossec in the Hotel des Menus-Plaisirs du Roi. Plans had been submitted for the formation of such a school by a horn player, Rodolphe, in 1775. The first concert took place in 1786. A school for declamation was then added, and the institution became the École Royale de Chant et de Declamation. In 1792 Sarrette organized the École gratuite de Musique de la Garde Nationale Parisienne, afterwards known as the Institut National de Musique. On Aug. 3, 1795, both schools were incorporated as the Conservatoire de Musique, with Sarrette as president. Four years later the Conservatoire had 600 pupils of both sexes, 125 professors, and a printing office for the publication of "Études de Conservatoire," edited by Catel, Méhul, Rode, and Kreutzer. Napoleon made important changes in the Conservatoire organization, improving it, as he had many other educational institutions; and in 1800 the faculty consisted of: Sarrette, director; Gossec, Méhul, Lesueur, Cherubini, Monsigny, inspectors of tuition; Louis Adam, Berton, Blasius, Catel, Devienne, Dugazon, Duvernoy, Garat, Gaviniès, Hugot, Kreutzer, Persuis, Plantade, Rode, Rodolphe, Sallentin, and in all 31 first class professors; Adrien, Baillot, Boieldieu, Dornich, Eler, Jadin, and in all 40 second class professors. Again reorganized in 1812 by the Decree of Moscow, nine pupils of each sex in preparation for the Théâtre Français were allowed 1100 francs each for maintenance. When Louis XVIII came to the throne Sarrette was dismissed, reinstated during six months of 1815 and again dismissed, and the Conservatoire was closed, to be reopened in 1816 as the École royale de Musique, with Perne as inspector general. Sarrette had been allowed a budget of 240,000 francs, which was reduced to 100,000 in 1802, but he gave form to the courses of study by means of the "Méthode de Conservatoire," established the prix de Rome, 1803, founded the library, and inaugurated theatrical and concert performances for the pupils. Perne held office until April 1, 1822, formed special classes for declamation and opera, and an École primaire du chant, besides affiliating subordinate schools at Lille and Douai. Cherubini increased the number of public concerts, established an auxiliary school at Toulouse, opened additional instrumental classes, improved the discipline and in all ways raised the institution's standard to a higher plane. Among the faculty during his long administration were: Habeneck and Paer, inspectors of tuition; Lesueur, Berton, Reicha, Fétis, Halévy, Carafa, composition; Lainé, Lays, Garat, Plantade, Ponchard, Banderali, Bordogni, Panseron, and Mme. Damoreau, vocal; Benoist, organ; L. Adam and Zimmerman, piano; Baillot, Habeneck, and Kreutzer, violin; Baudiot, Norblin, and Vaslin, 'cello; Guilou, Tulou, flute; Voght, oboe; Lefèvre, Klosé, clarinet; Delcambre, Gebauer, bassoon; Dauprat, Meifred, horn; Dauverné, trumpet; Dieppo, trombone; Naderman, Prumier, harp; Adolphe Nourrit, opera; Michelot, Samson, Provost, Beauvallet, dramatic action. Feb. 8, 1842, Cherubini was replaced by Auber, who established lectures on the history and literature of music, greatly enlarged the buildings and equipment and aided in the reform of pitch. Additions to the faculty during Auber's administration included Adolphe Adam, Ambroise Thomas, and Reber, composition; Elwart, Bazin, harmony; Battaille, Duprez, Faure, Garcia, Reval, Masset, vocal; Mme. Farrenc, H. Herz, Marmontel, Le Couppey, piano; Alard, C. Dancla, Girard, and Massart, violin; Franchomme and Chevillard, cello; Tulou, Dorus, flute; Verroust, oboe; Willent, Cokken, bassoon; Gallay, Meifred, horn; Forestier, Arban, cornet; Reginier, Monrose, Bressant and Mlle. Brohan, dramatic action. During the latter part of Auber's term Lassabathie was appointed administrateur, but on the appointment of Ambroise Thomas to the post of inspector general on the death of Auber, the office of administrateur and the allowance of maintenance to pupils were discontinued. Under the Thomas régime lectures on the general history of music, a class in orchestra and a compulsory sight singing class were established, and the Conservatoire received an increased allowance from the state which enabled it to pay better salaries. Theodore Dubois became director upon the death of Thomas, 1896. In 1908 the library of the Conservatoire numbered more than 30,000, and the museum, founded in 1861 with the Clapisson collection as a nucleus, contained more than 700 instruments. The affiliated schools included those of Marseilles, Lille, Lyons, Nancy, Nantes, Perpignan, Rennes, Toulouse, and Roubaix. The management and faculty was constituted as follows: Director, GABRIEL FAURE; composition and fugue, CHARLES LENEPVEU, C. M. WIDOR, Andre Gedalge, Georges Caus-

There was an enrollment of more than 700 free pupils of either sex in 1908.

Conservatori, or public schools for teaching music, were early established in Italy in connection with hospitals and benevolent institutions, and sometimes provided free board, lodging, and clothing for poor students of either sex, differing in these respects from the ACCADEMIA, which usually were devoted to the arts and sciences in general. Naples was the seat of the conservatori Santa Maria di Loreto, San Onofrio, De' Poveri di Gesù Cristo, and Della Pietà de' Turchino, all of which had their beginning in a music school founded in 1490 by the Fleming Jean Tinctor. In Venice were the conservatori L'Ospedale della Pietà, Dei Mendicanti, Degli' Incurabili, and L'Ospedaleto de' SS. Giovanni e Paolo; besides which there were many music schools attached to churches and cathedrals, patterned after the one established by Pope Gregory the Great in Rome. All these schools have passed away, although there are highly important Conservatori at NAPLES and MILAN, under royal patronage.

Performing right which is embraced in British copyright is not recognized in American law, music being protected only where it forms an integral part of the play. International copyright as provided for by the Berne convention of 1886 has decreased piracy in Europe, and reciprocal copyright privileges have now been established between most of the powers. A copy of the existing American law may be had free on application to the Copyright Division, Library of Congress, Washington, D. The music has been greatly admired, and as the libretto was not, many attempts have been made to provide new books, and in several languages. Rosaura and Isabella, two Andalusian ladies, are betrothed to Don Fernando and Don Alvar. The lovers sing their praises to the disgust of Don Onofrio, an old bachelor, who declares that they are no better than other women, and proposes a test of their constancy, to which the young men agree. They pretend to have gone to Havana with their regiments, but return in disguise to make love to each other's fiancée. Dolores, maid to the ladies, has been made a party to the scheme. To their delight, both young men are rejected, but Onofrio then suggests a further temptation. By his direction the young men pretend to take poison in their despair at not overcoming the scruples of the young ladies. Rosaura and Isabella, much moved by this evidence of passion, call Dolores to go for a physician, and by her advice take the young men in their arms, pending his arrival. Dolores comes back disguised as a physician, and pretends to administer antidotes. To calm the anxiety of her young ladies, Dolores now tells them of the plot, which they resolve to turn to the disadvantage of their lovers. They consent to marriage, and Dolores, this time disguised as a notary, performs the ceremony. The bridegrooms depart, only to return and upbraid the young women for their heartless conduct, but after teasing them sufficiently, the ladies confess the trick, Don Fernando and Don Alvar humbly beg forgiveness, and Don Onofrio confesses he was wrong.

Son of the Cavaliere Pasquale Costa, of an ancient Spanish family, and himself a gifted amateur; young Costa gained a free scholarship in the Royal College of Music, Naples; at 15 composed a cantata, "L'Imagine," which was performed in the college theatre; and at 18 the opera "Il Delitto punito." A grand mass for four voices, an oratorio, three symphonies, and other operas also date from this period. In 1829 he composed "Malvina" for the San Carlo opera house, then directed by Barbaja, and the following year he was sent to Birmingham by his master, Zingarelli, to conduct a cantata, but, through error, was compelled to sing the tenor part instead. Maestro al piano at the King's Theatre in 1829, he composed the grand ballet "Kenilworth," and in 1832 became conductor at the Italian opera. "Malek Adhel," performed at the Italian opera, Paris, 1837, was presented with greater success in London, but Costa's arduous duties as conductor doubtless compelled him to give less time to composition than he would have preferred. Counterpoint is the art of combining with a melody one or more melodious parts, as contrasted with harmony, which accompanies a melody with chords. It is so called because the notes or points are written counter to each other or "nota contra notam." The chief melody or theme or subject or CANTUS FIRMUS, the latter of the nearly synonymous terms being best, may pass from one part to another without losing its predominant character, from which it may readily be seen that the composer's aim is to give a singing quality to each part. The art may have originated from the difficulty presented in chanting church music in unison by singers with voices of varying range. The cantus firmi to which the Latin liturgy was so chanted in the earlier stages of Christianity were found to have a more agreeable effect when the low voices, instead of taking the melody an octave below, used intervals of a fifth or third, improving a part which was neither harmonic nor contrapuntal, strictly speaking, but partook the nature of harmony and counterpoint, giving rise to both. The development of counterpoint was marked by the growth of strict rules forming a kind of grammar, but with many exceptions, since music continued to be a living and growing language. Music constructed according to these rules was called "polyphonic" (many voiced) as distinguished from "homophonic" or one voiced. It has become the fashion to sneer at the laws laid down by the older contrapuntists as we do at the pedanticism of the Meistersingers, yet they were, for the most part, based on simple common sense. Counterpoint is either simple or double, and of simple counterpoint there are five varieties: 1. Note against note. 2. Two notes against one in the cantus firmus. 3. Four notes to one in the cantus firmus. 4. When the added part is in syncopation. 5. When there is free or florid accompaniment to each note of the cantus firmus. Some of the rules governing the first variety: "No discords are allowed." It may be observed that toleration of discord unless instantly followed by resolution is purely a matter of education, which such masters as Palestrina were born too early to have enjoyed. "More than three consecutive thirds or sixths are forbidden." Otherwise harmony would result instead of two individual melodies. "Consecutive fifths and octaves are forbidden." Consecutive fifths are not merely ugly but would throw the two parts into different keys, and consecutive octaves would merge two parts into one. "The fourth is to be considered a discord." It is, when combined with a third or fifth. To object to the rules of counterpoint would seem no more rational than to object to regular conjugation of verbs because there are irregular verbs. From the examples already shown it may be inferred that there are reasons for forbidding all dissonances other than passing notes, chromatics, and chords of more than three tones. Besides simple counterpoint, there is double counterpoint in which the parts must be interchangeable or invertible; usually at the octave, tenth, or twelfth. Rarer forms are triple or quadruple counterpoint, where there are three or four interchangeable parts; and still rarer, quintuple counterpoint, with five interchangeable parts. With Palestrina and his followers counterpoint reached its highest development in ecclesiastical music, and since further progress seemed impossible, musicians turned their attention to harmony, the evolution of which had been checked by the over stimulation of the sister growth. Up to the close of the 16th century the rules of counterpoint were the sole guidance of composers, but in 1605 MONTEVERDE, destined to become the most popular composer of his day, published a volume of madrigals at variance with the polyphonic method, and suggesting the harmonic style of treatment. It remained to a few musicians such as Porpora to carry on the traditions of the contrapuntists, whose principles had been elucidated in FUX'S "Gradus ad Parnassum" (Vienna, 1725), and through Haydn, pupil of Porpora, and Albrechtsberger, they were thoroughly grounded in Beethoven, however little he may have regarded them. A second culminating point in the history of contrapuntal music was reached in the works of Johann Sebastian Bach, who applied to instrumental music a complete knowledge of counterpoint as well as of harmony, and whose fugues are a most perfect illustration of the principles of counterpoint. Cherubini and Brahms were perhaps the most skillful contrapuntists of modern times, but counterpoint and harmony go hand in hand in the works of the latest composers, and in what is called free counterpoint is an intimate blend of both. See works of Fux (Eng. trans.); E. F. Richter, Macfarren; "Counterpoint Strict and Free," Prout, London; and "Cours de Counterpoint et de la Fugue," Cherubini, Eng. trans., Novello & Co., London.

Occasional musical productions followed, but in 1846 it was remodelled for opera exclusively. For a time Costa directed and Mario and Grisi were members of the company, as well as Alboni, Tambourini, Persiani, and Ronconi. In 1861 Patti made her first European appearance there. Tamberlik, Lucca, Graziani, and Albani came next, and for a time there were performances of English opera, notably those of Balfe. Then came a period of depression, with a revival of interest which continued throughout the administration of Sir Augustus Harris, dating from 1888 to his death in 1896, since which time the opera has been managed by the Opera Syndicate as lessees of the house.

Two years later he won the Mendelssohn scholarship, but relinquished it, and his parents themselves took him to Leipsic, where he became a pupil of Plaidy, Moscheles, Reinecke, Richter, and Hauptmann at the Conservatory. After occasional concert performances he studied conducting with Kiel at the Berlin Stern Conservatory, and in 1869 produced his C minor symphony and a piano concerto in A at St. James's Hall, London. Costa, whose assistant he had become, got him the commission for "The Corsair," which was given at the Birmingham Festival of 1876, and the same year the Carl Rosa company produced his opera "Pauline." His recognition as one of the foremost of English composers followed the performance of his "Scandinavian Symphony," London, 1880. Thereafter he conducted the Philharmonic concerts, at the Melbourne Centennial, receiving $25,000 for a six months' engagement, and on returning to England conducted the Hallé orchestra at Manchester, the Liverpool Philharmonic concerts, the Bradford Festival, the Scottish orchestra and the Cardiff Festival, 1902, and the Handel Festival, 1903. Creed. In the early Anglican Church the Nicene Creed was chanted in the ancient manner, and Marbeck's setting strictly follows the Roman original. That of Tallis is likewise of Gregorian origin. The Apostles' Creed is either said or intoned. After his debut in Rome, 1783, Crescentini sang in opera in London, Vienna, Lisbon, and throughout Italy. In 1805 he became singing master to the Imperial family at Vienna, where Napoleon heard him, engaged him at a handsome salary, took him back to Paris, and decorated him with the Iron Cross. The climate injured his throat, and in 1812 he obtained a reluctant permission to return to Italy. After a four years' sojourn in Rome he taught at the Royal College of Music in Naples, wrote a treatise on singing, which was published in French and Italian, and composed. B. as "Das Heimchen am Herd," but the English version of 1900 carries the title as above. The story need not be repeated, since it is doubtless familiar to every reader, and is followed with reasonable fidelity by the librettist. The scene is laid, of course, in an English village. The best musical numbers are Dot's dancing song in the second act, the quintet with which it concludes, and the prelude to the third act, in which Goldmark introduces the song "Weisst Du, wie viel Sternlein stehen." The work is characterized by great beauty of melody and a total absence of sensationalism.

Crispino. Luigi Ricci's three-act opera buffa to text by Piave was first performed 1850, Venice. Crispino the cobbler is unhappy because of his poverty, although blessed with a beautiful wife, Annetta, who adds to the family purse by singing ballads, and is admired by a wealthy count. Resolved to throw himself into a well, Crispino meets a fairy who persuades him to turn physician, declaring he will always be successful in his operations unless she is present. Great prosperity follows, which turns Crispino's head, and he forgets old friends and becomes cruel to Annetta. One day when he is about to strike his wife the fairy appears and takes him to a cave where many lamps are burning, each representing a human life. Finding the oil low in his own lamp, he suggests that some be poured in from Annetta's, whereupon the fairy reveals herself as Death, and tells him to make a last request before dying. Crispino asks for another opportunity to see his wife and children, and the scene shifts again to his little home. Fortunately he has only had the nightmare, but he is filled with joy on awakening, and is content with his lot. Federico Ricci collaborated with his brother in this work.

Born in Padua, Cristofori became in early manhood the best harpsichord maker in that city, and as such was called to Florence by Prince Ferdinand, son of Cosmo III. The precise date of his invention of the piano is not known, but the instrument is described in vol. v of Maffei's "Giornale dei Letterati d'Italia," and he must have seen it during his visit to Florence in 1709. A later specimen of the Cristofori grand piano owned by the Kraus family is shown at the Museum in Florence, and a beautiful specimen of his harpsichords, one having three manuals, was presented by Frederick Stearns of Detroit to the University of Michigan. The English version is called "The White Maid." The Laird of Avenel, Scotland, follows the Stuarts into exile, having entrusted the care of the estate to Gaveston, his steward. Gaves-ton does not share the common superstition of the White Lady who protects the Avenels, and whose statue is shown in the castle, and believing the Laird to have died without heirs, offers the estate for sale, hoping to bid it in at a low price for himself. Anna, ward of Gaveston and protégée of the Laird, determines to prevent this rascality, and disguised as the White Lady, appears in the village, and writes Dickson, a farmer, appointing a midnight meeting at Avenel. Dickson is afraid to go to the haunted castle, but George Brown, a young English officer who is his guest, offers to do so. Anna, who recognizes in Brown the young officer she has nursed back to health after a dangerous wound, tells him there is an heir to the Avenel property, and implores his aid in circumventing Gaveston. When the sale comes on, Dickson has been authorized by the neighbouring farmers to bid for the property so as to prevent Gaveston from securing it, but Gaveston outbids him. Brown, prompted by Anna, bids higher, and when payment is demanded, Anna produces a treasure which had been hidden by the old Laird in the statue of the White Lady, and tells Brown that he is Avenel's heir. Gaveston tears off her veil, revealing the fact that Anna and the White Lady are one and the same, and of course the engagement of the heir and his young protectress follows. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Ah, what pleasure to be a Soldier," George; "Where yon Trees your Eye discovers," the White Lady and chorus; "Heavens! what do I hear?" trio finale. Act II: "Poor Margaret, spin away!" spinning song, Margaret (Anna's nurse); "Come O gentle Lady," George; "From these Halls," duet; septet with chorus, finale. Act III: "With what delight I behold," Anna; and the chorus "Robin Adair," slightly unfamiliar but very graceful as treated by Boieldieu.

Dance Music has played a most important part in the origin of FORM, if it be not the original form, of all music in all countries. It is quite conceivable that the first idea of rhythm, whether in poetry or music, was suggested by the dance; it is certain that all instruments of percussion were invented and employed to mark the steps in dancing; and since dancing was a religious rite as well as a social diversion with all primitive peoples, the first attempts at singing were probably guttural grunts, rising or falling in tone as the dancers became more excited and more rapid in movement, or slackening as their vigour relaxed. Of such a type is the dance of the American Indian and of the savage tribes in Africa. Dancing formed part of the religious ritual of the Jews and of Greeks, and of the Romans, but there soon came to be a distinction between the religious dances and those meant for social entertainment. The ancient secular dances were largely gymnastic, that is, intended for exercise; or mimetic, that is, conveying emotion by gesture, and the various dances in Greece were so highly specialized that there is reason to believe they included a form of entertainment closely corresponding to the modern ballet d'action, which developed in Italy in the 16th century. During the early ages of Christianity dancing was not wholly discouraged, but it is probably because of the pagan origin of the dance and its connection with pagan worship that rhythm was ignored in the songs used in Christian worship. At any rate secular music came to be noted as to rhythm long before church music, which had reached its final perfection in form in the 16th century, was so divided; and as the secular songs were nearly always composed in some dance rhythm, the practice of the leaders of rebellion against the authority of Rome in religious matters of having the hymns and chorales adapted to popular music, soon reacted on the older church music itself. There is a remarkable similarity in the dance rhythms of all European races, however different they may be in name. In various forms, these rhythms have perpetuated themselves in the SONATA and SYMPHONY from the earlier orchestral suites, which were merely various dances so brought together as to give an agreeable sense of variety. Modern composers, even more than those of the classic period, borrow freely of the dance tunes of every nation, and the waltz is taking its place along with the gavotte, sarabande, scherzo, contredanse, and minuet in the severest forms of music.

Count Armand, to whom Michele is under obligation, falls into disfavour with Mazarin, who places a guard at the city gates in order to prevent his escape. Michele hides the Count in a water barrel, induces Marcelline to remain at home and thus enable the Count's wife Costanza to take her place, and gets the fugitives past the gate. Although the Count is obliged at one time to hide in a hollow tree, the party reaches the open country in apparent safety. Auber's three-act opéra comique to book by Scribe was first produced at the Opéra Comique, Paris, Mar. 6, 1841, and as "The Crown Diamonds" in London the following year. The scene is laid in Portugal, 1777. Don Henrique, who is making a journey for the twofold purpose of attending the coronation of his queen and wedding Diana, daughter of his uncle, Count de Campo Mayor, minister of police; is captured in the mountains by a band of counterfeiters. Catarina, who is the leader of the gang, spares his life on condition that he shall not reveal what he has seen for a year. As he is about to depart they are surrounded by troops led by Don Henrique's friend, Don Sebastian, and the coiners and Henrique make their escape disguised as monks while Catarina and her lieutenant Rebolledo disappear through a subterranean passage, taking with them a casket containing some mysterious jewels. In the next act Don Henrique reaches the home of his uncle, only to find that Diana is in love with his friend Don Sebastian, while he himself is sighing for Catarina. Meantime a carriage bearing Catarina and Rebolledo breaks down, and they seek shelter in the castle of the minister of police. When Diana reads an account of a robbery containing a description of

Catarina and Rebolledo, the latter disappears, and Don Henrique tells Catarina of her danger, confesses his love for her, and urges her to run away with him. Catarina, though moved by his generosity, declines, but gives him her ring as a souvenir. Just then Count Campo Mayor enters and announces that the Crown Diamonds have been stolen and, despite the excitement of the moment, recognizes the ring Don Henrique is wearing as one of the royal jewels. Diana turns the situation to her own advantage by making Henrique promise that if she will assist Catarina to escape he will refuse to marry her. In the last act Diana, Count Campo Mayor, Don Henrique, and Don Sebastian assemble in an ante chamber at the royal palace, where Rebolledo is presently announced as Count Fuentes. It develops that the crown diamonds have been actually pledged for the national debt, and that Count Fuentes has been employed to procure duplicates to be used on state occasions until the real jewels can be redeemed. The scene changes, the Queen comes in, expresses her pleasure at the way in which Count Fuentes has performed this delicate mission, and makes him Minister of Secret Police. Count Campo Mayor is then admitted, and he announces the decision of the royal council that her majesty shall marry the prince of Spain. The Queen declares she will marry a man of her own choice, and when the Count protests, threatens to confiscate his property for permitting the crown diamonds to be stolen, and orders him to arrest Diana and Don Henrique for harbouring the thieves. Diana enters, but fails to recognize Catarina in the Queen. Not so with Don Henrique. He knows Catarina at once, is amazed to find her in the royal palace, and is planning to rescue her by force when the Queen orders his arrest for high treason. Another change of scene reveals her majesty holding court. Don Henrique comes in to plead for Catarina to find at last that Catarina and the Queen are one and the same, and to be overjoyed with the announcement of her majesty that she will wed him as the man who loved her for herself alone. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Roll on, roll on," Henrique; "O'er Mountain steep, through Valley Roaming," Rebolledo; "The young Pedrillo," tutti; "Unto the Hermit of the Chapel," chorus of disguised monks; Act II: "The Brigand" and "In the Deep Ravine of the Forest," Don Henrique; "Oh, Surprise unexpected!" quintet; "Love! at once I break thy fetters," and "If I could but Courage feel," Catarina; "Oh, whisper what thou feelest!" Henrique; Act III: "When doubt the tortured frame is rending," Diana; "Love, dwell with me," the Queen.

Din Din. Indian variety of cymbals.

Dinorah. Giacomo Meyerbeer's three-act opera to book by Barbier and Carré was first performed April 4, 1859, at the Opéra Comique, Paris. The scene is laid in the Breton village of Ploermel. Höel, a goatherd, and Dinorah, his betrothed, start to the chapel to be married on the day appointed in the village for a pilgrimage in honour of the Virgin, but the festivities are interrupted by a storm, and Dinorah's home is destroyed by lightning. Höel is advised by the Wizard Tonick to seek the treasure of the Korigans, a Breton fairy folk, in preparation for which he must spend a year in solitude. He sets forth upon his quest, but Dinorah, believing herself deserted, goes mad, and wanders through the woods with her goat, seeking him. After an overture which introduces a chorus sung behind the curtain, the opera opens with the return of Höel a year later. The villagers are singing as Dinorah enters, looking for her goat. Corentin, the bagpiper, has returned to his cottage, and begins to sing and play in order to drive away the fairies and goblins, and Dinorah, attracted by the music, enters, and insists that he continue. Then Höel, confident that he has discovered the secret of the Korigan's treasure, and believing that the first to touch it must die, comes in to get Corentin to serve as his victim. As he enters Dinorah disappears through a window, and a moment later Höel sends Corentin out for wine, meaning to stiffen his courage for the ordeal. Woodcutters are singing a brindisi as the curtain rises on the second act, and Dinorah enters, still seeking her lost lover. The scene shifts to the Val Maudit into which come Höel and Corentin; but the latter, hearing Dinorah singing the treasure ballad, learns that whoever first touches it will die, and he refuses to go on. An angry debate follows, after which Dinorah and her goat appear and Höel mistakes her for a spirit sent to deter him from the search. Dinorah falls into a mountain torrent while attempting to cross on a tree which bridges a chasm, and Höel plunges in to her rescue. The shock and Höel's singing restore Dinorah's reason, and on learning what she has suffered, Höel persuades her that the events of the year have been a dream. Dinorah tries to recall the Pardon of Ploermel, which is taken up by a chorus approaching from the distance, and Höel and Dinorah resume their interrupted journey toward the chapel. At the first production the cast was as follows: Dinorah, Mme. Miolan-Carvalho, sop.; Höel, Faure, bar.; Corentin, Sainte-Foy, ten. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Si carina, caprettina," Dinorah; "Sto in casa al fine," Corentin; "Se per prender," Höel; Act II: polka mazourka known as "The Shadow Song," Dinorah; "Chi primo al tesor," Dinorah; "Le crede il padre," Höel; Act III: "Sei vendicata assai," Höel; "Santa Maria! nostra donna," Dinorah and chorus.

Discant was used from the 12th century on as a general term for all forms of polyphony. Discant was soon defined by a set of rules, the object of which was to enable a singer to improvise a part to a subject, but improvisation or Contrapunto alla mente must soon have given way to written discant. Discant was double, triple, or quadruple according to the number of parts added. Discant was also the name of the part added to the tenor melody or cantus firmus, or to the first part, if there were several. The Discant was written above the tenor on its own clef.

programme music; much chamber music, and many songs. In boyhood he studied violin with König and Ziegler, played in the orchestra at St. Stephen's, Vienna; was admitted to Prince von Hildburghausen's private band; studied with Bonno and Trani, and became intimate with Gluck and Haydn. In 1761 he toured Italy with Gluck, and in 1764 went with Gluck and Guadagni to the coronation of Archduke Joseph as King of the Romans at Frankfort, played at court, and on returning to Vienna became chapelmaster to the Bishop of Grosswardein at Pressburg, in which capacity his first oratorio "Isacco figura del Redentore" was composed to the Bishop's Latin version of Metastasio, followed by the comic opera "Amore in Musica." In 1769 he joined the Prince Bishop of Breslau, Count von Schafgotsch, in his retirement at Johannsburg, and through that patron's influence was made Knight of the Golden Spur and ennobled by the Emperor. His pleasant relations with the Prince Bishop continued with slight interruption until the death of that dignitary, 1795, after which he accepted the patronage of Count von Stillfried, residing on his estates in Bohemia for the remainder of his life. D. Emmet. In 1861 a song of the same name and to the same tune, words by Albert Pike, went the rounds of the Confederate army, and became very popular. Djamileh. Georges Bizet's opéra comique to book by Louis Gallet was first performed May 22, 1872, at the Opéra Comique, Paris, and has lately been revived with success in Germany. Harun, a young Turkish voluptuary, has avoided serious love because of the example of his father's unhappy marriage, and is unmoved when his secretary Splendiano tells him his fortune will become exhausted in another year, and equally so when told that the lovely Djamileh having reigned for the month, ought, in accordance with Harun's way of life, to be replaced by a new slave girl. Splendiano is merely directed to buy another slave girl, and seeing his master's indifference to Djamileh, begs to retain her for himself, to which Harun agrees. But Djamileh really loves Harun, and she refuses to be comforted with kind words or the present of a necklace, and declines her freedom when it is offered her. She rejects Splendiano, and, learning from him that a new slave is to be purchased, plans to disguise herself as the new favourite, who turns out to be a young Almée who dances marvellously. Re-entering Harun's presence disguised as the Almée, Djamileh's shyness astonishes her master, but when she suddenly unveils and pleads to be taken back as his slave rather than depart with fortune and freedom, Harun at last realizes and succumbs to the power of true love. The music is of a deliciously oriental type, and the opening chorus of Nile boatmen and the lovely music of the Almée's dance have won instant favour wherever performed.

Horatio di Massarena has fallen in love with a mysterious girl in a black domino whom he met at a masked ball given by the Queen of Spain, and meeting her again a year later at a like function, confesses his love, but is rejected. At midnight the girl seeks her companion, Brigitta, who has been sent away by Horatio, and failing to find her, cries that she is lost, and hurries away. In the next act she appears in the house of Horatio's friend, Count Juliano, disguised as a waiting maid, but is recognized by Horatio. She slips away as the Count's dinner develops into an orgy, having obtained some keys from Gil-Perez, porter at a convent, who has abandoned his post to pay court to Claudia, Count Juliano's housekeeper. The mysterious lady is, in fact, Angela, of noble birth, destined to become abbess of a convent, although she has not yet taken the vows. Her influence has already helped Horatio in his diplomatic career, but while delighted at meeting him at the ball, she should have returned to the convent at midnight. However she does return unnoticed, and in the last act is shown in the robes of an abbess, the office which is about to be conferred upon her. Horatio comes to the convent at this opportune moment, seeking release from an engagement to marry Ursula, a noble damsel who is likewise an inmate of the convent. He recognizes the girl of the black domino in the Lady Abbess. The Lady Abbess has grown to love him. The Queen of Spain solves all difficulties by nominating Ursula to be Abbess and permitting Angela and Horatio to marry.

Giuseppe Verdi's five-act grand opera to book by Mery and Du Locle was first performed Mar. 11, 1867, at the Grand Opera, Paris. The story deals with the passion of Don Carlos, son of King Philip of Spain and grandson of the Emperor Charles V for his stepmother, Elizabeth of Valois. The King's jealousy is aroused, despite the innocence of his queen, and in the last act a meeting between the Queen and Don Carlos in the convent of St. Just is surprised by Philip, who then turns Carlos over to the Grand Inquisitor, who had previously demanded his life, and had already brought about the destruction of Posa, the best friend of Carlos.

Don Giovanni or Don Juan. W. A. Mozart's two-act opera buffa to book by Da Ponte was first performed Oct. 29, 1787, at Prague. Although hurriedly composed, this opera is one of Mozart's best. Its full title is "Il Dissoluto Punito; ossia il Don Giovanni," and the material is taken from Tirso de Molina's tale, "El combidado de piedra." The scene is laid in Seville, and the first act represents a square before the palace of the Commendatore. Don Giovanni, a dissolute noble, has gained access to the apartment of the Commendatore's daughter, Donna Anna, at night. When the Commendatore, alarmed by her outcries, rushes to her assistance, Don Giovanni stabs him and escapes, joining his servant Leporello, who awaits him in the square. Donna Anna and her fiancé Don Ottavio swear to avenge the Commendatore's death. While master and servant are discussing a new love affair, Donna Elvira, an earlier victim, comes along, bewailing her fate, and Don Giovanni attempts to flirt with her, not having recognized her, only to be met with bitter reproaches. Don Giovanni runs off, and Leporello shocks Elvira with a catalogue of his master's conquests in various lands. Meantime Don Giovanni has discovered a pretty peasant girl, Zerlina, who is at the point of marrying Masetto, a young farmer. The bridegroom to be is dragged away by Leporello, and Don Giovanni offers himself to Zerlina as a substitute, but she is rescued by the timely appearance of Donna Elvira, who leads her away to a place of safety. Donna Anna and Don Ottavio now enter, and as Don Giovanni is making love to Donna Anna and inquiring as to the cause of her mourning, Donna Elvira returns and denounces him as the Commendatore's murderer. Don Giovanni replies that the woman is crazy, and deceives Donna Anna for the moment.

Later, she is convinced that Elvira is right, and orders her betrothed to kill Don Giovanni. Meeting his servant, who tells him that Zerlina has returned to Masetto, Don Giovanni rejoins the peasants, and invites them to a feast. The fifth scene shows the banquet hall. Master and servant are attentive to their guests. Having plied them well with wine, Don Giovanni tries to drag Zerlina away, but is prevented by the timely entrance of three masks, Ottavio, Anna, and Elvira, who have come to learn just what sort of man Giovanni is. Giovanni tries to throw the blame on Leporello, but his visitors remove their masks and denounce him for his crimes. The first scene of the second act represents the attempt of Don Giovanni to abduct Zerlina from Donna Elvira's house. Masetto and a party of friends come in time to effect a rescue, but are thwarted in their attempt to avenge themselves on Don Giovanni, who has changed costumes with Leporello, in order to elude Elvira. Master and servant meet again in front of the Commendatore's palace, and as Don Giovanni tells of meeting one of Leporello's innamoratas, the statue of the Commendatore speaks warningly. Don Giovanni only laughs and invites the statue to dine with him the following evening, an invitation which the statue accepts. Another scene represents Donna Anna clamouring for vengeance while Ottavio is pleading for love, and then the action shifts again to the banquet hall in Don Giovanni's palace. The master is at dinner, served by Leporello. Elvira comes to implore Don Giovanni to repent before it is too late, but is only laughed at. She screams with terror on departing, and a knocking is heard, at which the musicians run away and Leporello hides under the table. Don Giovanni opens the door, and finds the Commendatore's statue has come to the feast. He orders Leporello to lay another cover, but the statue replies that it does not eat the food of mortals, and invites Giovanni to sup with it. Despite the pleading of Leporello, Don Giovanni accepts, then the statue takes him by the hand, and for the last time orders him to repent. On his refusal the statue disappears, and demons carry Don Giovanni to the infernal regions. The original cast was: Donna Anna, Teresa Saporiti, sop.; Donna Elvira, Micelli, sop.; Zerlina, Bondini, sop.; Don Ottavio, Baglioni, ten.; Don Giovanni, Luigi Bassi, bar.; Il Commendatore, and Masetto, Lolli, bass; Leporello, Felice Ponziani, bass. Doni (Giovanni Battista) wrote "Compendio del trattato de' generi e de' modi della musica," a valuable book on Ancient Greek music, published 1635, Rome; reconstructed a double lyre, which he called "Lyra Barberina," or "Amphichord"; taught in Florence University. B. 1593, Florence; d. 1647.

Donizetti (Gaetano) composed "DON PASQUALE," "LA FILLE DU REGIMENT," "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR," "LUCREZIA BORGIA," "LA FAVORITA," "ELISIR D'AMORE," "LINDA DI CHAMOUNI," which have retained their place in modern repertoire, and in all 66 operas. Son of a weaver, who was ambitious that he should become a teacher, Donizetti, who had previously studied music in the Naples Conservatory and the Liceo Filarmonico at Bologna, enlisted in the army to avoid obedience to his father's wishes, and while stationed at Venice, 1818, produced his first opera, "Enrico di Borgogna," which was followed by "Il Falegname di Livonia," "Nozze in Villa," and "Zoraide di Granata," the last named work making a great success in Rome, 1822, when the composer was carried in triumph, crowned at the capitol, and exempted from further military duty. "Anna Bolena," 1830, Milan, was the first of Donizetti's operas to attract attention outside Italy, and then came "L'Elisir d'Amore" and "Lucia di Lammermoor," the last, written for Naples, 1835, gaining him an appointment as teacher of counterpoint in the Royal College of Music of Naples. The rapidity which characterized Donizetti's composition is shown in the fact that "Il Campanello di Notte," based on a vaudeville he had seen in Paris, was both written and composed in nine days. On the refusal of the Neapolitan censor to permit the performance of his "Poliuto," 1837, Donizetti removed to Paris, where he brought out a number of operas. Victor Hugo forbade the representations of "Lucrezia Borgia," which had been based on his play, so the scene was changed from Italy to Turkey, and the opera was presented as "La Rinegata." In 1840, "Poliuto," "La Fille du Regiment," and "Favorita" were all performed, greatly extending the composer's fame. A tour in which he visited Rome, Milan, and Vienna followed, and while in the latter city he produced "Linda di Chamouni," and was made chapelmaster and court composer to the Emperor. "Don Pasquale" and the funereal "Dom Sebastien" were produced on his return to Paris, 1843. In 1844 "Catarina Cornaro" was produced at Naples. A paralytic stroke then ended the composer's career, although he lingered four years more. Among his other operas are: "Parisina," "Torquato Tasso," "Marino Faliero," "Maria Padilla," and "Rita" and "Il Duca d'Alba," which were performed after his death. A "Miserere" and "Ave Maria," composed for the imperial chapel at Vienna, 6 masses, 12 string quartets, a requiem, and some songs should also be noted. B. Bergamo, Nov. 25, 1797; d. April 8, 1848.

Don Pasquale. Gaetano Donizetti's three-act opera buffa was first produced Jan. 4, 1843, at the Théâtre des Italiens, Paris. Don Pasquale, an irritable old gentleman, whose nephew Ernesto declines to marry to please him, resolves to punish his prospective heir by taking a bride himself. His old friend Dr. Malatesta, who is likewise the friend of Ernesto and the confidant of his love affairs, is called upon for advice, and promptly approves Don Pasquale's plan, picturing an imaginary sister as an ideal character who will just suit his old friend. Don Pasquale is delighted, and Dr. Malatesta at once goes to Norina, Ernesto's innamorata, with whom he compounds a plot that shall unite her to her lover. The second act reveals Don Pasquale in gala costume, waiting for his bride, and when Malatesta brings in Norina, he is delighted with that young person's excessive modesty and loveliness. Yielding to his ardent persuasion, she signs a marriage contract, then instantly displays such shrewishness as would have shamed Katherine before Petrucio tamed her. Ernesto is astonished at the scene, but is warned by Malatesta to be silent. Norina calls in the servants, gives extravagant orders, which Don Pasquale vainly countermands. He is told that she is the mistress of the house and will do as she pleases. In the third act Don Pasquale's house is filled with dressmakers and milliners to the old man's dismay, but they are finally dismissed, as Norina intends going to the theatre with Ernesto. Pasquale forbids her to leave the house, whereupon she promptly boxes his ears and departs, dropping a note as she does so, which excites Pasquale's jealousy. Malatesta comes in and consoles his old friend, and in the end Pasquale is delighted to learn that his marriage was a sham and to transfer his pseudo bride to Ernesto. The original cast was: Norina, Grisi, sop.;

Ernesto, Mario, ten.; Dr. Malatesta, Tamborini, bass; Don Pasquale, Lablache, bass. The principal musical numbers include two duets and a quartet, often heard in concert, and the serenade "Com' e gentil," which greatly enhanced Mario's reputation and is still the delight of tenors the world over.

Double Bass is the largest instrument of the viol family, with a compass from E or G' to a. When there are three strings they are attuned to G', D, A by the French and Italian and to A', D, G by the English system. Where there are four strings they are attuned E', A', D', G'. The earliest specimens of the instrument are those of Gasparo da Salo, 1542-1609, and its introduction in the orchestra is accredited to Michael Monteclare about 1696. The music sounds an octave lower than written, and its English name may have originated in the fact that it was usually employed to double the bass of the 'cello. While of the utmost importance in modern orchestra, the double bass is too unwieldy for solo purposes, and the instrument played by Bottesini and other virtuosi was really a smaller one, properly called Basso di Camera.

Double Bassoon doubles the bass of the bassoon as the doublebass does that of the 'cello, with a compass from B" flat to F. The music sounds an octave lower than written. Numerous attempts have been made to improve the bassoon, which is unwieldy in size and difficult to blow and finger. A demi-contra-fagotto in F is intermediate in pitch between the bassoon and double bassoon, and a double bassoon in E flat is made of brass for use in military bands.

Drum. Of the various percussion instruments which appear to have been common to all peoples and to all times, the most important is the kettledrum, which was probably brought to Europe by returning Crusaders. Kettle shaped shells of brass or copper are closed by a parchment drawn tightly over the mouth by means of screws, and the drummer is able to tune his instrument by tightening or slackening this parchment. In the modern orchestra at least two kettledrums are required, usually tuned to tonic and dominant of the composition to be played, but in Berlioz' Requiem are parts for eight pairs of kettledrums. Where two kettledrums are employed their combined range is from F to f. Beethoven was the first composer to recognize the musical value of the kettledrum, which had been used merely as a noisemaker before his time, and various tunings for the drums are given in all his important scores. The kettledrums are beaten with sticks having whalebone handles and wooden buttons covered by fine sponge. The tone of the bass drum is too indefinite to require tuning. It is important in fixing rhythm. In small orchestras the bass drummer is often compelled to play cymbals as well, in which case he beats the drum with one hand only. The Snare Drum or side drum is a military instrument frequently employed by modern composers. The Tenor Drum is a large side drum without snares, employed as a substitute for the kettledrum in military bands. TAMBOURINES and TABORS are varieties of drum less commonly used in the orchestra.

Later he became organist at the Jesuit church in Kuttenberg, removed to Prague, where he took a degree in philosophy, and being disappointed in his desire to join the Cistercians, fell in with Count Männer, with whom he journeyed to Mechlin, where he played organ at St. Rombaut's Church. His next engagement was as organist at Berg-op-Zoom, but in 1782 he obtained an appointment at Amsterdam, where his growing reputation led to his engagement for a year at the Hague as music master to the Stadtholder's children. At 22 he went to Hamburg for a course of lessons under C. P. E. Bach; then toured Germany as a performer on Hessel's "Harmonica," and spent a year with Prince Radziwill on his Lithuanian estates. In 1786 he played before Marie Antoinette in Paris, but declining an appointment at the French court, visited his brother Franz Benedict in Italy, and after another sojourn in Paris, went to London in 1790, where he speedily became the fashionable pianist and teacher of the period; married Sophia Corri, daughter of Domenico, and engaged with his father-in-law in the publishing business. In 1800 he was obliged to leave England to escape his creditors, and after a sojourn at Hamburg formed the connection with Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia, which lasted three years, and until the Prince was killed in the battle of Saalfeld. Son of the innkeeper and butcher at Mühlhäusen, Bohemia, and destined by his father for the butcher's trade, young Dvořák learned violin from the village schoolmaster, and later organ, piano, and theory from A. Liehmann at Zlonitz and from Haneke at Kamnitz. His father's objections to music as a means of obtaining a livelihood were finally overcome, and in 1857 Dvořák went to Prague, where he studied three years in the organ school under Pitzsch, and supported himself by playing viola in the cafés. In 1862 the National Theatre was organized, and Dvořák became a member of the orchestra, directed by Smetana, who, with Karel Bendl, gave him valuable assistance in his studies. In 1873 he became organist of St. Adalbert's Church, retired from the orchestra, married, and organized a class in music. His first work to attract general attention was performed in that year, the patriotic cantata "Die Erben des weissen Berges," to words by Halek ("The Heirs of the White Mountain"); and the following year a symphony in E flat, the scherzo from a symphony in D minor and two notturnos for orchestra were performed. "Der König und Köhler," although it had to be entirely rewritten before production, won him a pension of $250 per annum from the government, and this pension was afterwards increased. The friendship of Brahms, one of the examiners, resulted from this award. "Klänge aus Mähren," a collection of duets, and the "Slavische Tänze," published by Simrock, became popular throughout Europe. Thereafter Dvořák was an international character. He conducted performances of his own works in London, where he was favourably received, and from 1892 to 1895 directed the National Conservatory in New York, leaving suddenly for Prague, where he became head of the conservatory six years later. Dvořák while in America advised the upbuilding of a national school based on plantation music, and attempted to embody the elements suggested in his "From the New World" symphony, the only effect of which seems to have been that the country was subsequently flooded with debased melody in syncopation, or "ragtime." In his chamber music Dvořák introduced the "Dumka," a kind of lament, and the "Furiant," which is a modified scherzo. Both in chamber music and in song Dvořák created a wealth of melody. B. Son of the organist in the Roman Catholic church at Worcester, Eng., Elgar received his earliest and almost his only lessons from his father, who was a good violinist as well as organist. Both father and son played in the orchestra at the Three Choirs Festivals, and in time young Elgar was able to assist his father at the organ. He received a few violin lessons from Pollitzer during a short visit to London, 1877, and two years later became bandmaster at the County Lunatic Asylum, Worcester, composing and arranging music for his men, who were likewise attendants in the institution. An Intermezzo was produced in 1883 at Birmingham, which seems to have been Elgar's debut as a composer. In 1882 he had become conductor of the Worcester Amateur Instrumental Society, and wrote the programmes for its concerts. In 1885 he succeeded his father as organist at the Roman Catholic church, where he remained for the next four years, marrying in 1889 and settling in London. Discouraged alike by publishers and managers, Elgar retired to Malvern and taught and conducted. His Froissart overture, played at the Worcester Festival of 1890, had somewhat extended his reputation, and in rapid succession the "Scenes from the Saga of King Olaf," "The Black

Knight," "Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands," and his "Lux Christi" oratorio, were made known; and in 1899 his cycle of "Sea Pictures" increased his popularity. The cantata "Banner of St. George," a Te Deum and Benedictus in F, and the cantata "Caractacus" bring the list down to the notable "Dream of St. Gerontius," which has now been heard in Germany and in America, as well as in England, where it won him the honour of knighthood. The scene is laid in an Italian village to which the celebrated quack Dr. Dulcamara comes to sell his medicines. Adina, the village belle, is loved by Nemorino, who buys of the quack a bottle of the Elixir of Love, which is nothing more than a rather heady wine. Hoping for a speedy understanding with Adina, Nemorino drinks the whole bottle, becomes drunk, and greets Adina with such assurance that she immediately resolves to marry the Recruiting Sergeant, who has been courting her for a long time. Receiving an order transferring him to another part of the country, the Sergeant implores her to set the marriage for that day, to which Adina agrees. In the midst of the festivities Nemorino has sobered up, and he implores Dulcamara to give him a more potent charm, which the quack refuses to do, as Nemorino has no more money. At this juncture the Sergeant appears, Adina having refused to sign the marriage contract until evening, and finding Nemorino in need of money, offers him a bonus of 20 crowns if he will enlist in the army. Thus Nemorino obtains a second bottle from Dulcamara. Meantime the news has spread through the village that Nemorino's uncle has died, leaving him some property, and the village maidens show an increased interest in the heir which he attributes to the magic effect of the Elixir, and he resolves to make Adina jealous. She too seeks the aid of the quack, and learns from him of Nemorino's devotion, whereupon she jilts the Sergeant and marries her devoted lover. In the first act is the admirable buffo song "Udite, udite, o rustici," Dulcamara; the duet "Obbligato, ah! si obbligato," Dulcamara and Nemorino; and in the second act a lively tenor romance for Nemorino, "Una furtiva lagrima," and the duet "Quanto amore! ed io spietata," Dulcamara and Adina.

Engraving Music is the first process in the publication of most of the music in modern times. Stave lines are first cut on a pewter plate, and the notes are added by means of steel punches. Proofs are then pulled in a copper plate press, revisions made, and when the plate has been corrected, a copy is taken in transfer ink, which is then applied to a lithographic stone. Constanza maintains her vow of fidelity to Belmonte, although the Pasha seeks in every way to gain her affections. Belmonte, notified of their place of captivity by Pedrillo, attempts a rescue, but is himself captured, and the four Christian prisoners are brought before the Pasha, to whom Constanza boldly tells her story. Adolar's sister had killed herself, and in punishment her ghost must roam the earth until the tears of injured innocence fall upon her ring. Lysiart fails to gain the favour of Euryanthe, but Eglantine, who loves Adolar, has entered the tomb and taken away the dead woman's ring, which she gives Lysiart, and his possession of the jewel is taken by Adolar as proof of Euryanthe's fault, since the secret was known only to Euryanthe and himself. Adolar takes Euryanthe into the desert, meaning to kill her, but they are attacked by a serpent, and, after killing the monster, Adolar decides to leave her to her fate. King Louis finds her alone in the wilderness, and she tells him the story of Eglantine's treachery. Adolar, who has begun to suspect that Euryanthe was the victim of a plot, goes to Nevers to punish Lysiart, and meets a procession in honour of his wedding with Eglantine. Faust. Charles Gounod's five-act opera, to words by Barbier and Carré, founded on the first part of Goethe's greatest work, was first sung at the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris, Mar. 19, 1859, and still ranks with the most popular in modern repertoire. Faust is repre-ented as an old man regretting the untasted joys of youth after a life spent in study. Mephistopheles offers to renew his youth and to serve him through life, provided Faust becomes his servant thereafter. Charmed by the vision of Marguerite, a lovely village maid, Faust drinks the potion Mephistopheles has prepared, and in the guise of a young and handsome cavalier sets off for the kermess at which he is to meet her. Valentin, who is going to the wars, gives his sister Marguerite a tender warning of farewell, but after his departure Mephistopheles, by means of a message he pretends to bear to Martha from her husband, who has been killed in battle, introduces Faust to Marguerite, and by making love to the foolish old woman, leaves them together. Siebel, a lad of Marguerite's own rank, endeavours to protect her, but is helpless against the gallantry and generosity of Faust, whose present of jewels arouses the maiden's consciousness of her own beauty. When Valentin returns from the wars he finds Mephistopheles singing a mocking serenade beneath the window of his sister, whose name had become a by-word to the neighbours. Valentin fights with Faust, whose sword, directed by Mephistopheles, strikes him down. The dying Valentin curses Marguerite. Overcome with horror, forsaken by friends, and dreading to meet Faust, Marguerite seeks refuge in a church. Even in these holy surroundings evil spirits jibe at her. In despair she kills her child, and is thrown into prison. There Faust sees her in a vision while revelling with Mephistopheles in the Brocken's Walpurgis, and demands that Mephistopheles return with him and rescue her. Marguerite, condemned to death, though mad, shrinks away from Faust on seeing his companion, and prays to God for his pardon and her own. The prayer is granted. A final tableau reveals Marguerite in Heaven, praying for her lover. Mephistopheles sinks before the angelic host, and Faust kneels to beg forgiveness. The original cast was: Faust, Barbot, ten.;

In the second act the excommunication is pronounced by Balthasar, and in the next act when Fernando returns from victories over the Moors, Alfonso loads him with honours, and, finding Leonora loves him, arranges for their marriage. It was afterwards, with Beethoven's reluctant consent, reduced to two acts. Both take place in a Spanish prison where Florestan, a Spanish noble, is confined by order of Pizarro, the governor. Florestan's wife, Leonora, disguises herself as a lad, Fidelio, and obtains employment in the prison, where the turnkey's daughter, Marcelline, falls in love with her. Rocco, the turnkey, approves the match, although Jaquino, his assistant, also loves Marcelline. Fidelio profits by her employment to seek out her husband, but in vain. Then comes a letter announcing a visit of inspection from the minister, Don Fernando, and Pizarro at once determines Florestan shall be put to death. Rocco, the old turnkey, refuses to commit murder, so Pizarro orders him to dig a grave in which the body may be concealed, meaning to kill Florestan himself. Fidelio assists in this grewsome task, then gains admittance to the dungeon in which her husband is confined, and gives him bread and wine, for he has been nearly starved by Pizarro's orders. Florestan is brought forth, but as Pizarro tries to stab him, Fidelio throws herself between them, then covers Pizarro with a pistol. Just then a trumpet announces the approach of Don Fernando. Pizarro rushes out in despair, and when the minister enters he instantly orders the release of his old friend Florestan and the punishment of his cruel enemy. Marcelline naturally agrees to marry Jaquino on discovering that Fidelio is a woman, and there is general rejoicing as the curtain falls. The original cast was: Don Fernando, Weinkoff, bar.; Pizarro, Meier, bar.; Florestan, Demmer, ten.; Rocco, Rothe; Jaquino, Cache; Leonore, Frl. Milder, sop.; Marcelline, Frl. Muller, sop. Beethoven wrote in all four overtures to this opera, which are now called the Leonore overtures No. I, No. II, No. III, and the Fidelio overture. He even planned a fifth. The second, No. III, was for the production of the modified work; the third, No. I, was for a performance at Prague which was never given, and the fourth was the Fidelio, first played May 26, 1814, on the second and final revision of the work. Its popularity was immediate and still continues. Marie, vivandière of the 21st Regiment of Napoleon's army, had been found on a battlefield in infancy by Sergeant Sulpice and adopted as "The Daughter of the Regiment." During the occupation of the Tyrol by the French Marie has developed into womanhood, and Tony, a peasant lad who has saved her from falling over a precipice, becomes desperately in love with her. While seeking an interview in the camp he is arrested as a spy, but manages to clear himself and win the consent of Marie's numerous foster-fathers to become her husband on condition that he joins the regiment. But before the wedding can take place the Marchioness of Berkenfeld appears, and Sergeant Sulpice remembers to have a letter addressed to her from Marie's father, which was attached to the child's dress when he found her. He presents this letter, and the Marchioness claims Marie as her long lost niece. Tony is rejected as an unsuitable suitor for the noble young lady, and marches away with the regiment. Marie is sad in the midst of her luxury, but presently the regiment comes marching back, and Tony has become its colonel. He renews his suit, the marchioness declines to consider it, and an elopement is planned, but on the confession of the marchioness that Marie is not her niece but her daughter by a secret marriage with an army officer of lower social position than her own, Marie yields to the mother obedience which she had denied the aunt, and, though overwhelmed with grief, renounces Tony. In the end the marchioness relents, and the regiment joyfully prepares to celebrate the nuptials. The original cast included Mme. Scaroeder-Devrient, sop., as Senta; and Wachter, bar., as the Dutchman. Driven to anchorage near a shore by a severe storm, the Norwegian Captain Daland regrets not having been able to make his home port, which is but a short distance off. A second vessel looms up in the storm, and its black mast and red sails proclaim that the Flying Dutchman is skipper. The captains meet, the

Dutchman offers pearls for a night's lodging, and all his wealth if the daughter Daland has mentioned will become his bride. Daland agrees and the two captains sail away together. The second act reveals Senta spinning with her maidens in Daland's home. She sings the ballad of the Flying Dutchman, who, having sworn with horrid blasphemy that he would double a cape though he had to keep on trying to all eternity, has been condemned to do so. Every seven years the Dutchman is permitted to go ashore, and if he can find a maiden who will love him faithfully, the curse will be removed; but otherwise he must sail on to the day of doom. As the ballad ends, Senta cries that she would be that faithful maid, which her suitor Erik, who has just entered, hears, and is deeply grieved. Vainly does Erik plead his love. Then he points to the Dutchman's picture which hangs in the room, and declares he had dreamt the Dutchman would come, claim Senta as his bride, and sail away with her. At this moment her father and the Dutchman enter. Daland commends the stranger to his daughter, and is later rejoiced that Senta has agreed to become the Dutchman's bride. The third act represents a harbour with Daland's and the Dutchman's ships at anchor. Erik makes a last appeal to Senta, and when she refuses to listen further, reproaches her with infidelity. At this the Dutchman despairingly goes aboard his ship, believing Senta false, and orders his men to sail away. As the vessel moves from the shore Senta plunges into the sea, crying, "Here am I, faithful unto death!" the doomed ship sinks, and Senta and the Dutchman are seen transfigured and at last united. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Mit Gewitter und Sturm," Der Steuermann (Pilot), ten.; "Die Frist ist um," the Dutchman; Act II: "Summ' und brumm du gutes Mädchen," spinning chorus of maidens; "Johohae! träfft ihr das Schiff im Meere an," Senta; "Wie aus der Ferne," Senta and the Dutchman; closing with Daland in terzetto;

Flonzaley Quartette was founded Nov., 1903, at "Le Flonzaley," near Lausanne, Switzerland, by E. J. de Coppet, solely and absolutely for the sake of art. Its position among similar organizations is exceptional, by reason of the fact that all the players are free from material preoccupation, and devote their time exclusively to the cultivation of chamber music. The quartette played in public for the first time, Nov., 1905, in Switzerland, and in the autumn of 1907 gave a series of concerts in Munich, Frankfurt, Leipsic, Cologne, and Amsterdam. During the season of 1907-8 the quartette played in New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and other American cities. The plans for 1908-9 include tours of Switzerland and Germany, with two concerts in Leipsic and four in Berlin; Holland, with 20 concerts in all, four in Amsterdam and two at The Hague, returning to America, Dec. 20, 1908. Members of the quartette were: Adolfo Betti, 1st violin; Alfred Pochon, 2d violin; Ugo Ara, viola; Iwan d'Archangeau, 'cello. Adolfo Betti made his debut as a violinist at seven, but hoped for a career in literature rather than music, until César Thomson urged him to devote himself to the violin. He entered the Liège Conservatory, 1892, studied four years with Thomson, and won the Conservatory's gold medal. He gave concerts in Austria, Germany, and England, 1896-1900, then becoming a teacher in the Brussels Conservatory. B. Mar. 21, 1875, Florence; add. New York. Alfred Pochon received his first instruction on the violin from Louis Rey, Geneva, later continuing his studies with César Thomson. In 1899 he became an assistant to this famous teacher in Brussels. B. July, 1879, Lausanne; add. New York. Ugo Ara was at first a pupil of P. A. Florence has been the seat, since 1862, of the Royal Musical Institute, which teaches music in all branches and includes an academy composed of non-resident as well as resident members. The average number of pupils is 220. A Philharmonic Society existed in Florence in the 14th century, and there were first produced those Laudi Spirituali from which oratorios were evolved. Under the Medici family the early form of music drama known as "feste musicali" were performed in splendid style, and the "Academy Degli Alterati" was among the first to devote itself to the representation of opera.

Florence (Evangeline) was the professional name under which Mrs. Alexander Crerar, born Houghton, won distinction as a concert singer in London. She displayed the astonishing range of g to c'''. B. Dec. 12, 1873, Cambridge, Mass; m. Oct. 17, 1894; add. Boston.

Pupil of the Conservatory of San Pietro a Majella, Naples, his first work, a three-act comic opera, "Carlotta Cleqier," was produced at Naples, but later withdrawn by the composer, who was dissatisfied, and burned his score. His latest opera, "The Scarlet Letter," which he hoped to produce in America, was the occasion of a legal controversy with H. von Conried. Flotow, Freiherr von (Friedrich) composed "STRADELLA" and "MARTHA," both of which attained wide popularity; intendant of the Schwerin Court Theatre, 1856-63. The son of a noble of Mecklenberg, Flotow was trained for the diplomatic service, but in 1827 visited Paris, studied music under Reicha, and though forced to leave by the Revolution of 1830, soon returned, and continued for many years to make that city his artistic headquarters. The first and very brief version of "Stradella" was produced in 1837 at the Palais Royal, but his first success was won with "Le naufrage de la Méduse," which was produced May 31, 1839, at the Théâtre de la Renaissance, and after a creditable run, won further honors for the composer in Germany, where it was given as "Die Matrosen." "Stradella," Hamburg, 1844, became immensely popular in Germany, though it proved a failure in London and was not produced in Paris. "Martha" was an instant success from its production in Vienna, 1847, having been rewritten from the earlier ballet of the same name composed with Burgmüller and Deldevez, 1844. Other operas of Flotow's were "L'esclave de Camoens," "L'âme en peine," "Leoline," "Die Grossfürstin," "Indra," "Rübezahl," "Hilda," "Albin," "La Veuve Grapin," "Pianella," "Zilda," "L'Ombre," "Naida," and "Il Fior d'Harlem." Flue Work. Division of organ stops which includes all pipes in which sound is produced by wind passing through a flue or windway, and striking against an edge above.

Flügel. Ger. "Wing." Name given both grandpiano and harpsichord because of their shape.

Flügel Horn. Ger. BUGLE; keyed brass valve instruments of varying range.

Flute. As employed in modern orchestra is of the transverse type, with a range of three octaves from c' upward. The piccolo flute, a smaller instrument, gives the same compass an octave higher. While the flute sounds as an open tube, its harmonics are modified by the facts that the mouthhole is less than the diameter of the tube, there is an air chamber formed at the end nearest the mouthhole by stopping the tube at the end with cork, and by modifications of the bore. The instrument is usually set in D, although there are flutes in F and in E flat for military bands. The material may be either wood or metal. The ordinary cone flute has six finger holes, six closed keys, and two opened standing keys. As improved by Boehm, the flute has 14 orifices, largely controlled, of course, by keys. The transverse flute is likewise known as the cross, or German flute, as distinguished from the direct or beak or flute-a-bec, which was blown from the end instead of from the side, and is now obsolete. The flute is among the most ancient of instruments, having been common to the Greeks and Romans, Egyptians and Asiatics, by all of whom it was made in a variety of forms, and sometimes doubled, so as to be capable of drone bass. Of the flutes-a-bec the flageolet is the only one to survive, although instruments of this type were formerly made in four sizes from bass to treble.

Flute d'Amour. Fr. Obsolete flute which stood in A and was of pitch corresponding to that of the Oboe d'amore.

Flute Work includes all organ stops based on the principle of the flute-a-bec not classed as Principal Work or Gedackt Work; whether open or stopped, of wood or metal. Thus far organ builders have not agreed upon the nomenclature of flute stops, and the number is infinite and fanciful. In some cases the names indicate pitch as bass flute, kleinflöte, flute descant; or the shape, as doppelflöte, flachflöte, rohrlöte; or quality, as flute creuse, flauto dolce, oboe flute, but in general they are meaningless.

Forlana. It. Lively Venetian dance in 6-8 time.

Form is a term which may be properly restricted to the general principles governing the construction of Absolute or Pure music, of which the highest type is the Sonata. The Concerto, the Symphony, the Overture, the String Quartet and Trio, treated under separate heads, are all varieties of the Sonata. Where music is wedded to words whether in song, opera, or oratorio, it must lend itself to the character of the words, since its primary purpose is to add force and expression to whatever thought, sentiment, or emotion the words convey. In programme music the composer must be equally unfettered by form, since it is his purpose to portray a character, an episode, or tell a story, translating the ideas conveyed by words into tones. Absolute music speaks the higher and universal language of the emotions which is not dependent for expression upon words; which cannot, indeed, be so well expressed in words. That sense of perspective and proportion which is looked for in the work of the painter, the sculptor, the architect, the poet, must be gratified in pure music also. In none of the arts can it be attained by rule. In none of them is it capable of exact definition. In the course of centuries certain principles have developed, however, by which symmetry and proportion in the sonata form may be sensed. When instrumental music began to develop apart from its function as accompaniment to the voice, the first expression of form was found in the Suites for orchestra or solo instruments. These were collections of dances so grouped as to afford agreeable contrast in rhythm, tempo, and key, and variety in melody. The Sonata was evolved from the Suite, and C. P. E. Bach was among the first to compose sonatas in the three movements which still distinguished it. Joseph Haydn, called the Father of the Symphony, confesses his obligations to Bach, and he, with Mozart, gave the sonata a still more definite form. Beethoven enlarged upon and improved the form of the sonata, which remains unchanged today, and is likely to remain unchanged until the advent of another great master. In modern usage the term symphony is restricted to the orchestral sonata, overture to a more condensed orchestral composition upon sonata lines; concerto to compositions for one or more instruments with orchestra, designed to display both the resources of the instruments and the skill of the performers, while the word sonata itself is reserved for compositions for one or two instruments. Bearing in mind these distinctions, it will suffice to know the general plan of the sonata and the points of difference between it and the several members of its family above enumerated. The sonata is usually in three movements. The first, which may or may not have a short introduction in slow time, is usually an allegro. The second movement may range from andante to adagio, while the third usually returns to allegro. In the early sonata form employed by Haydn and Mozart the first movement begins with the announcement of a theme or melody, the end of which is marked by a cadence; then comes the second theme often in the dominant key, and of course contrasted in melody; then another cadence, followed by the development or working out, and finally a return of both themes, the second modulated to the key in which the movement opens, concluding with a brief coda. The second movement is constructed in the same manner, usually in a related key, while the third movement is in RONDO form, and returns to the key of the first movement. Adhesion to closely related keys and a sharply defined cadence to close each section were characteristics of the early sonatas. Beethoven found the general sense of key tonality more highly specialized when he reached maturity, and he was therefore able to indulge in a wider range of keys, and to eliminate the frequency of the cadences. He likewise introduced additional themes, and expanded the coda, often employing fresh material, until it became an important feature of the composition.

of Foster have been harmonized as part songs, and are known the world over. There is no foundation for the assumption that he utilized the melodies of the negro slaves, for he came little in contact with that class, the error having arisen from the fact that most of his songs were first made known and were written for the "NEGRO MINSTRELS," who furnished a highly popular form of entertainment in his day. In music Foster was largely self taught, but he became familiar with the music of Beethoven, Mozart, and Weber in boyhood, had learned to play the flageolet at seven, and although debarred by his environment from composing in the larger forms, his power of invention was remarkable, his taste excellent. A thorough Bohemian in temperament, he possessed a talent for painting as well as for music, and taught himself German and French, but was content to take the profits on his songs without striving for distinction along more pretentious lines. He even permitted the first edition of "Swanee River" to be published as the work of Christy, the minstrel. Foster was born July 4, 1826, of Irish parentage, near Pittsburgh, Pa. At 14 he entered the Academy at Athens, Pa., and while a student there published a waltz for four flutes, and in 1842 his first song, "Open thy lattice, Love." His education was completed at Jefferson College, and thereafter he made his home in Pittsburgh. While in New York he was attacked with a malarial fever, and died Jan. 13, 1864.

Fra Diavolo. Daniel F. E. Auber's three-act opéra comique to book by Scribe was first performed Jan. 28, 1830, at the Paris Opéra Comique. It not only established the composer as a favourite with music lovers in the French capital, but proved equally popular when sung elsewhere in Italian and English. Fra Diavolo, a bandit, has failed in an attempt to rob Lord and Lady Allcash of their jewels, but, disguised as a marquis, he makes an impression upon the susceptible Lady Allcash, and learns the trick by which their property was saved. The party stops at the inn of Terracina, where Fra Diavolo plans another attempt at robbery. Meantime the carbiniers are endeavouring to capture the famous bandit, and Zerlina, the innkeeper's daughter, describes him in a popular song which celebrates his misdeeds, to the great delight of the marquis. Zerlina is to marry Lorenzo, the soldier who has been ordered to capture Fra Diavolo. Fra Diavolo conceals himself with two of his comrades, Beppo and Giacomo, in her room, in order that when all are asleep they may gain access to the Allcash jewels. Returning carbiniers arouse the guests before the bandits can carry out their plans, and when the company hears a sudden noise in the closet, Fra Diavolo steps out, and explains that he has been given a rendezvous by Zerlina. He thus escapes suspicion as a thief, although challenged to a duel by Lorenzo. One of the bandits is captured, however, and he betrays Fra Diavolo. The following day the famous bandit is killed while trying to escape from the soldiers, who have ambushed him, but not before he has cleared Zerlina's character. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "I don't object," Lord and Lady Allcash; "On yonder Rock reclining," Zerlina; "The Gondolier, fond Passion's Slave," Fra Diavolo; Act. II: "Let us, I pray, good wife, to rest," Lord and Lady Allcash; "Young Agnes," Fra Diavolo; "T is Tomorrow," Zerlina; "O Holy Virgin," Zerlina; Act III: "Proudly and Wide my Standard flies," Fra Diavolo; "Then since Life glides so fast away," Fra Diavolo; "O Holy Virgin! bright and fair," chorus of peasants.

Franck's education was begun in the Conservatoire at Liège, but at 15 he was admitted to the Paris Conservatoire, where he studied counterpoint and fugue under Leborne and piano under Zimmerman and obtained a first prize in 1838 by transposing a passage at sight to a third below. Forbidden by his father to compete for the Prix de Rome, Franck left Paris, 1842, and taught for two years in Belgium, returning to the French capital 1844. In 1848 he became organist at Ste. Clotilde, a post which he filled with distinction for 32 years. In 1872 he became professor of organ at the Conservatoire. Among his pupils were Vincent d'Indy, Henri Duparc, Ernest Chausson, Arthur Coquard, Samuel Rousseau, G. Pierné, Augusta Holmes, Charles Bordes, Guy Ropartz, and Camille Benoit. Franck's entire life was characterized by prodigious activity. During many years he was capable of teaching ten hours daily without neglecting composition, and at all times he exerted a profound influence over the younger musicians, by whom he was called "Angelic Doctor" and "Pater seraphicus." Important works other than those mentioned above are: the operas "Le Valet de Ferme," 1848; "Hulda," "Ghisèle," a "Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue," 1884; "Prelude et Finale," 1889; both for piano; the songs "Mariage des Roses," "Les Cloches du Soir," "La Procession"; the part songs for female voices, "La Vierge à la Crèche," "L'Ange Gardien," "Les Danses de Lormont," "Soleil," "Premier Sourire de Mai"; "Le Chasseur Maudit," symphonic poem for orchestra, 1884; "Les Djinns," symphonic poem for piano and orchestra, 1884; Variations Symphoniques for piano and orchestra, 1885; Sonata in A for piano and violin, 1886; Symphony in D, 1889; Andantino for violin with piano accompaniment; Mass for three solo voices, chorus, and orchestra; Hymne for four-part male choir to Racine's words; five pieces for harmonium; 59 motets for harmonium; nine Grandes Pièces; three offertories for soli and choir; four motets; Ave Maria, Veni Creator, for ten, and bass; O Salutaris, Chants d'Eglise, in three and four parts with organ accompaniment; transcriptions from ancient compositions for organ, Sonata for piano, "Les Trois Exilés," national song for bass and bar. voices; "Le Grade d'Honneur"; three trios for piano and strings, F sharp, B flat, B minor, Op. 1; fourth trio for piano and strings, in B major, Op. 2; Eclogue for piano, Op. 3; first duet on "God Save the King," for piano, Op. 4; first Caprice for piano, Op. 5; An-

Franco (Magister) wrote "Ars Cantus Mensurabilis," which is believed to have been the first treatise on "Measured Music," and may have invented the Longa, Duplex Longa, Brevis, and Semibrevis, which were the four primary characters employed in old NOTATION. There is much confusion regarding Franco's identity, and it is possible that there may have been three Magister Francos in the 11th and 12th centuries, as there are records of Franco de Colonia, Franco Leodiensis, Franco Parisiensis, Franco of Cologne, and Franco of Liège.

Son of Cristoph Franz Knauth, a well-to-do citizen of Halle, who opposed his early ambition to adopt music as a profession; young Franz, as he preferred to be known, became a pupil of Schneider at Dessau in 1835. Two years later he returned to Halle, but for six years was unable to obtain employment, and occupied himself in studying the works of Bach, Beethoven, and Schubert. His first set of songs, published in 1843, aroused the admiration of Schumann, and in course of time Franz was made organist at the Ulrichskirche, conductor of the "Singakademie," finally royal music director, and doctor of music in return for lectures before the students at Halle University. Deafness and failing health compelled him to retire from active work in 1868, and he suffered from poverty until four years later, when Joachim, Liszt, and Helene Magnus gave a series of concerts for his benefit which netted $25,000. B. June 28, 1815, Halle; d. Oct. 24, 1892, Halle. See Biography, Dr. W. Waldeman, Leipsic, 1893; sketches by Saran, Ambros, and Liszt.

Freischütz. Carl Maria von Weber's

three-act opera to book by Kind was first performed June 18, 1821, at Berlin, later in Italian, French, and English, and with new libretti. Max, a skilful marksman, loves Agathe, daughter of Kuno, chief huntsman to Prince Ottakar of Bohemia, and has been promised his prospective father-in-law's post if he can prove his worth at a hunting match, since Kuno is about to retire. Caspar, who also loves Agathe, but who has sold himself to the demon Zamiel, contrives a plot by which Max is to be delivered to the evil spirit as a substitute for himself. With Zamiel's aid he causes Max's bullets to go astray during a preliminary trial of skill, and then prompts the despondent marksman to repeat the words "In Zamiel's name" when he gets another shot. Max does so, and brings down an eagle. After this Caspar finds it easy to persuade Max that by Zamiel's aid he can get magic bullets which will always go straight to the mark, and to appoint a meeting in the Wolf's Glen, where Zamiel's aid can be evoked. The second act discloses Kuno's home. Agathe has a foreboding of evil which is confirmed by the despondency of Max, but a hermit has given her a wreath of magic roses which she hopes will protect her. The scene shifts to the Wolf's Glen, where Max and Caspar await the coming of Zamiel. Spectres and grotesque beasts, even the ghost of his mother fail to move Max from his purpose, and when Zamiel appears seven bullets are cast. Six are to be used by Max, but the seventh is to be directed at Zamiel's pleasure. In the third act we see Agathe preparing for her wedding. She tells Aennchen about a dream in which she had assumed the form of a dove, and had been struck down by one of Max's bullets, but becomes less melancholy as she dons the wreath of roses given her by the hermit. Then the scene again shifts to the field in which the marksmen are exhibiting their skill before Prince Ottakar and his court. Six times have Max's bullets gone straight to the mark. The seventh bullet is fired, by command of the Prince, at a dove. Agathe cries: "I am the dove," and falls to the ground. Then Max confesses that he has been in league with Zamiel, at which Ottakar orders him into exile. But it appears that the wreath of roses has saved Agathe. She is only stunned, and the bullet directed by Zamiel has slain Caspar. Then the hermit intercedes for the unfortunate lover, and it is arranged that, after a year of penance, Max is to become chief huntsman and marry Agathe. The overture has long been a favourite in the concert room. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "O diese Sonne, furchtbar steigt sie mir empor," Max, Kuno, Caspar, and chorus; "Durch die Wälder," Max; "Hier im ird'schen Jammerthal," Caspar; "Triumph! die Rache, die Rache gelingt"; Act II: "Schelm! halt fest," Agathe; "Kommt ein schlanker Bursch gegangen," Aennchen; "Leise, leise, fromme Weise," Agathe; "Wie? was? Fughetta. It. Fugue in condensed form.

Fughette. Ger. Short fugue.

Fugue is a contrapuntal form of composition which takes its name from the Latin word "fuga," a flight, and which is characterized by a theme introduced by a single voice which one or more voices pursue. This first theme is called the Subject. It is made as short as possible, consistent with the definite expression of a musical idea, and is so constructed as to permit the entrance of a second voice before its conclusion. The second voice then enters with the Answer, which may be a repetition of the Subject in another key, usually that of the dominant if the Subject is in the tonic; and while the Answer is being uttered, the first voice follows it in counterpoint, sometimes evolving a definite theme, which is called Counter Subject, and is developed later. The entrance of a third voice is sometimes delayed by the introduction of a short passage called the Codetta, leading back to the original key of the Subject, which is then announced by the third voice, the others following in counterpoint. This completes the Exposition of the fugue, and then follows either an Extra Entry of the Subject or a Counter Exposition, in which the Answer is usually given before the Subject, and both may be in inversion. The Episode follows next, presenting new material with free imitation and modulations to related keys. Several such Episodes bound together by contrapuntal treatment, in the course of which Subject, Answer, and Counter Subject (if there be one) make their appearance in original form or altered by Augmentation, Diminution, Inversion, or by Cancrizans motion. At this point comes the Stretto, the re-entrance of the Subject or Answer and Subject, and with this begins the Finale of the fugue. This Final section is, in fact, often called the Stretto. Here is a return to the original key, the Subject is worked up to a climax and the conclusion follows. The fugue which has been described is a single fugue in three parts. Double, Triple, and Quadruple fugues are those in which the Subject is announced in two, three, or four parts, or as Cherubini would have it, "with one, two, or three Counter Subjects." Fugues are classified according to the number of parts, as fugues a 2, a 3, a 4, etc.; by the relation of Subject and Answer, as fugues by Inversion, Augmentation, or Diminution; by key relations, as the Tonal Fugue, in which the Answer must remain in a given key or compass, or the Real fugue, where the Answer is given note for note at a measured interval to the Subject. A fugue is said to be Strict if the laws of fugue are closely adhered to, and Free if they have been violated. A Chromatic fugue is one in which there are many chromatic passages; a Diatonic fugue is one in which diatonic relations predominate. Fugues likewise take the names of the MODES in which they are composed. From what has been said it must be apparent that fugues are of infinite variety. All were developed from mediæval Counterpoint, and there is an endless Latin nomenclature, of which a single example need be given "Fuga per Canonem," or fugue according to canon, which we now call CANON. See Fux's "Gradus ad Parnassum," 1725, for the first definite codification of the laws of fugue; Marpurg, 1753; Albrechtsberger, 1790; Cherubini, 1833; Richter, 1876; primers in Eng., by J. Gioconda. Amilcare Ponchielli's four-act opera to book by Boito was first performed April 8, 1876, at La Scala, Milan. The story is partly based on Hugo's "Angelo." The scene is laid in Venice, to which the prescribed Prince of Santafior has returned under the name of Enzo. The curtain rises upon a scene of festivity in the courtyard of the Ducal Palace. Barnaba, spy of the Inquisition, loves La Gioconda, and when she enters with her mother, a blind woman—"La Cieca"—pleads his passion so violently that La Cieca calls out, the crowd returns, and the loser in a regatta, believing that La Cieca caused his defeat by witchcraft, attacks her. Enzo returns with Gioconda, attempts to rescue La Cieca, but the disturbance is soon quelled by Aloise, one of the chiefs of the Inquisition, and in gratitude La Cieca gives her rosary to Laura, the wife of Aloise. Laura, to whom Enzo had formerly been betrothed, recognizes him. Barnaba, knowing that both Laura and Gioconda love Enzo, contrives a plot to capture Gioconda and destroy Enzo and Laura. He tells Enzo that Laura still loves him, and will come to his ship at nightfall, and then tells Aloise that Laura and Enzo are about to elope. In the second act Barnaba escorts Laura aboard Enzo's vessel. Gioconda has followed them, and is about to stab Laura, when she sees the rosary La Cieca had given her. Then she suddenly determines to save her rival. Barnaba, who had left the ship, is returning with Aloise, but Gioconda smuggles Laura ashore before their arrival. Meantime the Venetian galleys have closed about Enzo's ship, and he sets fire to his vessel to prevent its capture. The next act reveals the House of Gold. Aloise tells Laura that she must die, and sends Gioconda to administer poison. Gioconda, however, substitutes a narcotic for the poison. She has promised herself to Barnaba, provided he will aid her in the plot she has arranged to free Enzo and Laura. The fourth act shows Gioconda's home in the ruined palace on the Orfano Canal. Street singers enter, carrying the sleeping Laura, who is placed upon a bed, but wakes in time to prevent Enzo from wreaking his fury on Gioconda, whom he believes to have murdered her. Then comes a dramatic farewell between the happy lovers and the girl who is sacrificing herself for them. Gioconda slips on her gayest attire, but when Barnaba comes to claim her she stabs herself, exclaiming as she dies, "I have sworn to be thine, take me, I am thine." Infuriated at this, Barnaba cries out that he has murdered La Cieca, but this outburst of villainy fails to horrify his victim, for La Gioconda is dead. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Feste e pane," regatta chorus; "E danzan su lor tombe," Barnaba; "Figlia, che reggi il tremulo," Gioconda, Barnaba, and La Cieca; "Voce di donna," La Cieca; "Per tutti ma non per me," Enzo and Barnaba; "Tradita Ahime!" Glinka (Michael Ivanovich) composed the first national Russian opera, "A Life for the Czar," "Russlan and Lioudmilla," based on Poushkin's poem, the failure of which caused him to thereafter devote himself to orchestral works. After a tour in the Caucasus, he retired to his country estate, where he studied the works of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Cherubini. In 1823 he accepted an official post in St. Petersburg, but continued the study of music, even taking vocal lessons from Belloli, and mingling with a society at once artistic and aristocratic. In 1828 he made an Italian tour and met Bellini and Donizetti. In 1833 he studied composition with Dehn in Berlin, and on his return to Russia, set about his first serious work in music, a national opera. Joukowsky, the poet, suggested "Ivan Sousanin" as the hero, and Baron Rozen wrote the libretto for the work which was first performed as "A Life for the Czar," Nov. 27, 1836. After two years spent in the service of the Imperial Chapel, the failure of his second opera decided Glinka upon leaving Russia, and he spent some time in Paris, where he was deeply influenced by Berlioz, and in Spain, where he gathered material for future work. He returned to St. Petersburg on the outbreak of the Crimean war, and again became interested in church music. Gluck, von (Christoph Willibald) reformed the opera, reducing music to its proper function, that of seconding poetry by enforcing the expression of the sentiment and the interest of the situations, without interrupting the action or weakening it by superfluous ornament. To paraphrase Gluck's own words in his dedication to his great opera "Alceste," his idea was that the relation of music to poetry was much the same as that of harmonious colouring and well disposed light and shade to accurate drawing, which animate the figures without altering their outlines. These and other principles enunciated by Gluck have been the germs of all subsequent attempts at the improvement of opera, whether by Berlioz, Meyerbeer, Weber, or Wagner and his followers, or the "Young Italian" school. Born on the estates of Prince Lobkowitz, to whom his parents were servants, Gluck had his first lessons on the violin, harpsichord, and organ, and in singing in the Jesuit school at Kommatou, Bohemia. He studied under Czernohorsky in Prague, 1732-35, supporting himself by church singing, concerts, and playing at country dances. In 1836 he went to Vienna, met Prince Melzi at the Lobkowitz house, and in the service of that gentleman studied with Sammartini in Milan. "Artaserse," 1741, and half a dozen other successful Italian operas were the fruits of this first period in his development. Contemptuous treatment accorded him by Handel during a London engagement at which his "La Caduta de' Giganti," "Artamene," and the pasticcio "Piramo e Tisbe" were produced only caused him to work with more serious purpose. He studied Rameau's operas during a sojourn in Paris, applied himself to the art and literature of the classic periods of various peoples, and ten years after his failure in London, or in 1755, established himself as a composer in Vienna. His "Antigono," Rome, 1756, gained him the Golden Spur with the title of "Ritter" and the prefix "von." The operas composed during this period have long since been forgotten, but he was making progress, and as singing master to Marie Antoinette, acquired the good will and esteem of that princess, which afterwards proved most useful. "ALCESTE," Vienna, Dec. 16, 1797, and "Paride ed Elena," 1770, produced at Vienna, were the first operas in which he exemplified his art theories. The adverse criticism which they provoked determined his withdrawal to Paris, where his "IPHIGÉNIE EN AULIDE," based on Racine's drama, was produced April 19, 1774, at the Opéra. Only the patronage of his former pupil, Marie Antoinette, now Queen of France, sufficed to uphold the composer, but this work, followed by "ORPHÉE ET EURYDICE," 1774, and "Alceste," adapted to the French stage, 1776, eventually resulted in the shelving of Rameau and Lulli. "ARMIDE" was produced Sept. 23, 1777. Piccinni, the Italian composer, produced his "Roland" on the same theme four months later, and then began the war of the Gluckists and Piccinnists, which for a time divided the musicians of France into two hostile camps, but resulted in a complete victory for Gluck. Both composers set "IPHIGÉNIE EN TAURIDE," but that of Gluck, May 18, 1779, was wholly successful, while that of Piccini, Jan. 23, 1781, fell flat. "Echo et Narcisse," Sept. 21, 1779, proved to be Gluck's last opera, and it was not a complete success. He had meant to compose "Les Danaïdes," but was struck down with apoplexy, gave the libretto to Salieri, and retired to Vienna. Others of Gluck's operas which may be mentioned are: "Sémiramide riconosciuta," 1748; "La Clemenza di Tito," 1752, "Telemacco," 1765, "L'Arbre enchanté," 1775; "Catherine Assiégée," 1775. Besides his operas Gluck composed church music, symphonies, a concert, a string quartet, trios, sonatas, and songs. B. July 2, 1714, Weidenwang, Upper Palatinate; d. Nov. 15, 1787, Vienna.

God save the King was written and composed, in all probability, by Henry Carey, and sung by him as his own work at a dinner given in 1740 by Admiral Vernon to celebrate the taking of Portobello. The authorship has been claimed, however, for Lulli, Dr. Bull, James Oswald, a Scotch musician, and is probably an adaptation of folksong. The so-called national anthem of England, it serves as the tune of "MY COUNTRY 'TIS OF THEE," otherwise "America"; as the tune of the Danish national air, "Heil Dir, dem libenden," and the German "Heil Dir im Siegerkranz." The tune was employed by von Weber in his Jubel overture, "Kampf und Sieg," No. 9, and he twice harmonized it for four voices, and by Beethoven in his "Battle Symphony." Beethoven wrote seven variations on it for piano, and arranged it for solo and chorus with piano, violin, and 'cello accompaniment.

Gottschalk was the son of an English scientist, his mother being a daughter of Count Antoine de Brusle, Governor of San Domingo. The family was wealthy, and having manifested a talent for music at an early age, he was sent to Paris to study, his masters being Charles Halle, Camille Stamaty, and Maleden. Loss of the family fortune decided him upon a professional career, and his first tour in Europe was made in 1852 with complete success. Later he toured under

Gounod (Charles) composed "FAUST," which deservedly ranks with the most popular operas in modern repertoire, "ROMEO ET JULIETTE," the beauty of which has only recently been appreciated, much church music of the highest order; ranked with the greatest of modern composers not only of France, but of the world. Gounod's mother, an able musician and pianist, was his first instructor, but having completed a classical course at the Lycée St. Louis, he entered the Paris Conservatoire, 1836, studying counterpoint under Halévy and composition with Paer and Lesueur. "Marie Stuart et Rizzio," his cantata, won the prix de Rome, 1837, and his cantata "Fernand" won the grand prix, 1839. In Rome he was a careful student of Palestrina. A mass for three voices and orchestra was produced, 1841, and the 3-part mass à capella, Vienna, 1842. He returned to

Paris by way of Austria and Germany, and on the journey first became acquainted with Schumann's music. Again settled in Paris, he became organist and choirmaster at the "Missions étrangères," and studied for the priesthood, without, however, taking orders. His solemn mass in G, soli, chorus, orchestra, and organ, dates from this period. "Sapho," his first opera, was produced April 16, 1851, at the Académie, and in 1852 and for the next eight years he was conductor of the "ORPHÉON," for which he composed two masses for men's voices. The two symphonies in D and E flat composed at this time added but little to his reputation, and his dramatic works met with no great success until the production of "Faust," Théâtre Lyrique, Mar. 19, 1859. The immediate success of this opera enabled him to produce his "Reine de Saba" at the Académie, Feb. 28, 1862, but this work, although containing several gems still heard in concert, was soon retired. Then came "Mireille," founded on a poem by F. Mistral, "La Colombe," and "Roméo et Juliette," April 27, 1867. The Franco-Prussian war drove Gounod to London, where he appeared at many concerts and founded the Gounod Choir, but in 1875 he returned to Paris, where he produced a number of dramatic works, none of which was successful. Besides the church music already referred to, Gounod composed a Stabat Mater with orchestra, a De Profundis, an Ave Verum, Te Deum, a fourth Messe Solennelle, "Messe a Saint Cecile," "Messe a Jeanne d'Arc," "Messe Angeli custodes," the oratorios "Tobie," "Les Sept Paroles de Jesus," "Jesus sur la lac de Tiberiade." He became a member of the Institut, 1866, and Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, 1880. Greek Music has survived in greatly modified form in Gregorian Chant, since the old Church Modes were based upon those of the Greeks, but otherwise possesses only historical interest. There is no reason to believe the Greeks possessed a sense of harmony in the modern signification of that word, or of counterpoint. The lyre originally possessed but four strings, and was therefore incapable accompaniment in the modern sense, equally so of melody. Even the Egyptian lyre which came into later use had but eight strings, although a later fingerboard development of the instrument gave it greater compass. There were varieties of flute or "aulos," which word seems to have included primitive forms of both oboe, clarinet, and flute, but the instruments were crude, few in number, and were always of secondary importance to song. The earliest Italian opera was an attempt to present tragedy in the Greek form, but however much various musical reformers have endeavoured to adapt their ideas to their conceptions of the ancient tragedies, it is a debatable question whether even the choruses of Greek tragedy were chanted. Yet the Greeks could discriminate between the intervals of a fourth and a third of a tone; music played a highly important part in the religious and civic ceremonies of the people; music was treated as a branch of higher mathematics, like astronomy, by Greek philosophers, and was likewise supposed to have a highly important ethical influence as well. Thus there were three Genera. Diatonic music was preferred for the expression of virile and severe matter; the Chromatic was plaintive and sweet, and the Enharmonic stirring and agreeable. These genera differed from each other in important details. The primitive scale consisting of four notes sounded by the lyre in order not of ascent but of descent was the tetrachord. Taking a tetrachord of the tonic A, the three genera may be indicated as follows: Diatonic, a, g, f, e; Chromatic, a, f sharp, f, e; Enharmonic, a, f, e quarter-tone sharp, e. Two or more tetrachords were developed into a scale of greater compass by Conjunction, in which the highest note of the lower tetrachord is identical with the lowest note of the higher; or by Disjunction, which places an additional tone between the lowest of the upper tetrachord and the highest of the lower; or by a combination of both processes. These processes, and the addition of a lower A called Pro-

slambanomenos gave a two octave scale which was in use in the 3d century B. C. Besides the distinction of genera there was that of Mode. The Dorian, Iastian or Ionian, Phrygian, Aeolian, and Lydian were the principal modes, and each had its Hypo or Dominant and Hyper or Sub-Dominant relative, making 15 diatonic scales. The higher modes were employed for the expression of passion or grief; while the lower were regarded as erotic. Aristoxenus, Aristotle, Euclid, and Plato were among the most eminent of Greek theorists. See: "Modes of Ancient Greek Music," Monro, Clarendon Press, 1894; "Harmonics of Aristoxenus," Macran, Clarendon Press, 1902; "Aristoxene de Tarente," Louis Lalor, 1904.

Gregorianischer Gesang. Ger. Gregorian song.

Gregorian Music is the name of the vast collection of church music which was edited and revised under the personal supervision of Pope Gregory the Great and remains to-day the official liturgical music of the Roman Catholic Church throughout the world. The present Pope and his illustrious predecessor Leo XIII urged the abandonment of the operatic style of church music, use of which had grown to formidable proportions, and the Medicean edition of the Gregorian Music having become corrupt, the task of revision was placed in the hands of the Order of St. Benedict, which possessed at its house in Solesmes, France, a large collection of the chants in their earlier and purer forms. The superior solemn and religious beauty of this music has commended itself wherever it has been restored. The collection of music for the MASS comprises more than 600 compositions. The music for the Hours includes some 2000 Antiphons and 800 Greater Responds, and if less authentic than the first collection, closely resembles it in all respects. Much of the music in the earlier collection made by St. Ambrose in Milan is practically identical with that which bears stamp of St. Gregory's approval, the variations in melody being superficial.

Gregory the Great became Pope

590 and devoted much time to the personal revision and reformation of music in the church, establishing the great collection of plain-song which have since been called GREGORIAN MUSIC. B. Rome, 540; d. 604, Rome.

Gregorian Tones are the eight groups of chants in the eight different MODES to which the psalms are chanted in the Gregorian antiphonal system. Their restoration to the liturgy of the Anglican Church is a matter of current record, and it is worth while to note that they were almost wholly employed in the service up to the time of the Commonwealth.

Gresham (Sir Thomas) founded not only the college bearing his name, but a lectureship in music worth about $500 per annum, frequently bestowed until recent years upon men having no knowledge of music. D. London, Nov. 21, 1579.

Grétry (André Ernest Modeste) composed the operas "Richard Coeur de Lion," which contains the famous air "O Richard, o mon roi, l'univers t'abandonne," produced Oct. 21, 1784, and still in repertoire; "Le parlant tableau," "Huron," "Zemire et Azor," "L'Epreuve villageoise," and "L'Amant jaloux," in all 50 dramatic works, notable for their wealth of melody. As a child Grétry was a chorister in the church of St. Denis, Liège, but was dismissed as incapable at 11. He managed to obtain lessons, however, and to hear the performances of an Italian opera company, and at 18 had composed six symphonies and a solemn mass. These interested the Canon du Harlez, who provided the young composer with means to travel to Rome, where he remained seven years at the "College de Liège." Casali having vainly tried to teach him counterpoint and harmony during this period, dismissed him as incapable of learning, notwithstanding which he produced his operetta "La Vendemmiatrice" at the Aliberti Theatre with success, and also composed a De Profundis and other church music. Determined to devote himself to French opéra comique, he went to Geneva, 1767, where he tried to induce Voltaire to write a libretto. Though that illustrious author could not comply, he suggested "Isabelle et Gertrude," which had been previously composed by Blaise to Favart's book, and after this had been performed, advised Grétry to go to Paris. Acting upon this suggestion, Grétry journeyed to the French capital, secured the book for "Les Mariages Samnites" from an amateur, and finally obtained a performance of that opera through the kindness of the Swedish ambassador, Counte de Cruetz. This enabled him to stage "Le Huron" and "Lucile," and thereafter he ranked as the most popular of French dramatic composers. Mozart and Beethoven wrote variations on his songs, the Prince Bishop of Liège made him privy councillor, Napoleon gave him a pension and the Cross of the Legion of Honor, and in his old age he bought "l'Ermitage," Rousseau's house near Montmorency, and there wrote his amusing memoirs. Of his other works "Pierre le Grand" and "Guillaume Tell" were the most ambitious, and the most popular were "La double epreuve, ou Colinette à la Cour," "La Caravane du Caire," 1783, to book by the Bourbon prince who later became Louis XVIII, "Anacreon chez Polycrate," "Le Jugement de Midas," satirizing French music and the Académie, "Le Magnifique," "La Rosiere de Salency," "Aucassin et Nicolette," "Lisbeth," "Le deux Avares." Breitkopf & Härtel undertook the publication of Grétry's complete works. B. Feb. 8, 1741, Liège; son of a violinist; d. Sept. 24, 1813, near Montmorency. See biographies by A. J. Grétry, E. Grieg's mother, a cultivated amateur, gave him his first lessons; he began to compose at nine, and on the advice of Ole Bull, was sent to the Leipsic Conservatory, where he was a pupil of Hauptmann and Richter in counterpoint, of Rietz and Reinecke in composition, and of Wenzel and Moscheles for piano from 1858 to 1862, completing his studies with Niels Gade in Copenhagen. Returning to Norway he founded the musical union in Christiania, 1866, which he conducted until 1880, and with his friend Nordraak devoted himself to developing the national music of Norway. In 1865 and in 1870 he visited Rome, where he became intimate with Liszt. In 1879 he played his own piano concerto, A minor, Op. 16, at the Gewandhaus, Leipsic, to an enthusiastic audience. In 1888 he conducted his "Two Elegiac Melodies" for strings at the London Philharmonic, and gave a joint recital of his compositions with his wife, who was an excellent singer. In 1894, while again visiting England, he received the degree Dr. Mus. at Cambridge, but the greater part of his life was spent at his country home near Bergen, Norway. His larger compositions include, besides those already named, the concert overture "Im Herbst," sonata for violin and piano, in G, Op. 13, "Two Symphonische Stücke," piano four hands, Op. 14; sonata for piano and 'cello, Op. 36;

incited rebellion, and is executed. Arnold, Melchtal's son, loves Mathilde, daughter of Gessler, but casts his lot with the deputies of the three cantons, who determine to free Switzerland under Tell's leadership. The third act opens with a love scene between Mathilde and Arnold. Then Gessler's hat is set upon a pole, and the Swiss are commanded to do reverence to this emblem of authority. Tell and his son refuse, are arrested, and Tell is ordered to shoot an apple from his son's head. This he does, but Gessler has notched a second arrow, and Tell manfully tells him that arrow was meant for his destruction had he slain his son. The tyrant thereupon orders Tell's arrest, and he is led away in fetters, despite Mathilde's plea for mercy. Mathilde then joins the patriots. Their battles are successful, and finally Tell, who has escaped from prison and slain Gessler, appears, and the opera closes with a hymn to freedom. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Il ciel sereno," Alpine chorus; "Cinto il crine," chorus and dance; Act II: "Qual silvestre metro intorne," chorus of huntsmen and shepherds; "Selva opaca," Mathilde; "La gloria infiammi," Tell and Walther; Act III: "O muto asil," Arnold; "I boschi, i monti," the hymn to freedom. As now performed, the opera consists of three acts, the third having been eliminated, the fourth and fifth condensed. The original cast was: Mathilde, Damoreau-Cinti, sop.; Hedwig, Mori, mez. sop.; Jemmy, Tell's son, Dabodie, sop.; Gessler, Prevost, bass; Rudolph, Massol, ten.; Tell, Dabodie, bar.; Walther, Levasseur, bass; Melchtal, Dupont, bass; Arnold, Nourrit, bar.; Leuthold, Prevot, bar.; Fisherman, ten.

Guitar is the only modern representative of the numerous instruments of the lute, cither, or gittern families, with the exception of the MANDOLIN. The resonance box has a flat back, although the sides are curved somewhat like those of viols. There is a fretted keyboard, and there are six strings, three of gut and three of wire, attuned as follows: E, A, d, g, b, e, and sometimes E, B, e, g, b, e. The compass is E to a', and the music is written an octave higher than its sounds. Instruments of this class are doubtless of oriental origin. The obsolete English guitar was a wire-strung instrument replaced by the Spanish guitar, described above. Both Berlioz and Paganini were guitarists, but the instrument has of late years been superseded for dance music and accompaniments in English-speaking countries by the piano.

Halévy (Jacques François Fromental Elias) composed the opera "La JUIVE," the comic opera "L'Eclair"; was one of the best teachers and most industrious of musicians. Halévy, whose real name was Levi, gained prizes in solfège and harmony at the Paris Conservatoire, 1810-11, and then enjoyed the advantage of studying composition with Cherubini. "Les derniers moments du Tasse," "La Mort d'Adonis," and "Herminie" won honours for him at the Conservatoire, the last named capturing the prix de Rome, 1819; but before leaving for Italy he composed a De Profundis to Hebrew text and a march performed in a Paris synagogue on the death of the Duke de Berri, which he dedicated to Cherubini. A period of hard study in Rome bore fruit on his return in several dramatic pieces, and his first great success came in 1830 with his ballet, "Manon Lescaut." From 1827 he filled various chairs at the Conservatoire, numbering Gounod, Massé, S. David, Bizet, and other well known musicians among his classes. He became a member of the Institut, 1836, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and in 1854 permanent secretary of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in which capacity he wrote "Souvenirs et Portraits, études sur les beaux-arts," 1861. Many of Halévy's operas were written to inferior libretti, although his music was excellent. Among others to be noted are: "Guido et Ginevra," 1838; "Le Sherif," 1839; "Le Drapier," 1840; "Le Guitarrero," and "La Reine de Chypre," 1841; "Le Val d'Andorre," 1848, "Le Juif errant," 1852, "Vanina d'Ornano," and "Le Deluge," which were completed after his death by his son-in-law Bizet; music to his brother Leon's translation of "Prometheus Bound" (Æschylus); and these by no means complete the list. The librettists have altered Shakespeare's plot to the extent of introducing a ballet, causing Hamlet to succeed his uncle as King of Denmark, permitting the Queen, Laertes, and Polonius to live. The musical numbers include: Act I: "Angeli eterni," Ophelia; duo for Hamlet and Ophelia followed by "Per patria," Laertes; "Banda alla via mestizia," chorus; Act II: scena, Ophelia; the drinking song, "O liquore," the soliloquy "Essere o no," Hamlet; Act III: "A questa pie," Ophelia, "Deh! vanne a un chiostro," Hamlet, Ophelia, and the Queen; Act IV: dance music, the "mad" scena, Ophelia; Act V: "Povero fior," chorus.

Hammerstein (Oscar) built the Manhattan Opera House, New York City, and gave an excellent series of performances, 1906-7, in opposition to the Metropolitan Opera House, which were continued 1907-8, and then built an opera house in Philadelphia, for which he engaged a special company for the season of 1908-9. In early life Mr. Hammerstein was a cigar maker. His inventions of machinery for use in this trade brought him large sums of money, which he invested in theatrical enterprises. He built seven theatres in New York City, retaining the Victoria for his own use, and presenting so-called "vaudeville" at great profit. Mr. Hammerstein's venture in grand opera was made without help of outside capital, and he acted as his own impresario.

Handbells are employed by English change-ringers for practising the changes later to be performed on tower bells. As five men can manage 60 bells, bands of handbell players in England often perform elaborate music.

Handel (George Frederick) composed "The Messiah," one of the greatest of oratorios, 40 operas, of which only a few airs and his "Largo," an interlude from "Rinaldo," survive; was the greatest organ and harpsichord soloist of his age with the exception of Johann Sebastian Bach, and the greatest of English musicians, though born in Germany. Son of a barber, who finally became surgeon and valet to the Prince of Saxe-Magdeburg, and looked upon music with contempt, Handel was obliged to study in secret as a boy, but the intercession of the Duke of Saxe-Weissenfels won from the father permission for the lad to follow his natural bent, and he became the pupil of Zachau, organist of Halle Cathedral, where he studied organ, composition, and practised violin and clavier. In three years he had acquired all the knowledge Zachau could impart, and had composed, among other pieces, one motet each week. By Zachau's advice he went to Berlin, where his improvisations at the organ and harpsichord won instant favour. There he met Bononcini, whose successful rival he became later in life; and studied with Ariosti. The Elector volunteered to send the young musician to Italy, but his father insisted that he return to Halle, where he was entered as a university student, 1702, but in the same year became organist to the Schloss und Domkirche. The death of his father compelled him to seek a livelihood, and the following year he engaged as violino ripiando at the Hamburg Opera under Keiser, whom he succeeded as clavicinist. In 1703 he and Mattheson competed for a vacant post of organist at Lübeck, but both retired on learning that the organist would have to marry the daughter of his predecessor. Later the two musicians quarreled over Mattheson's opera "Cleopatra," a duel followed, and only a brass button, which turned Mattheson's sword, saved Handel's life. In 1705 "Almira" and "Nero," Handel's first operas, were produced at Hamburg, and these were quickly followed by "Daphne," "Florinda," and a Passion cantata. In 1706 he visited Florence, Venice, Rome, and Naples. A four years' sojourn initiated the composer into the beauty of Italian song, and he composed the operas "Rodrigo," "Agrippina," the oratorios "Resurrezione," and "Il Trionfo del Tempo," some church music, and the serenata "Aci, Galatea, e Polifemo," a subject to which he afterwards composed an English serenata. In 1810 he accepted the post of chapelmaster to the Elector of Hanover, but went to England on leave of absence, and composed "Rinaldo" in the two weeks previous to its production, Feb. 14, 1711. The success of this opera was so great that Handel reluctantly returned to Hanover, and soon returned to England, overstaying his leave, and thus for a time losing favour with the Elector, who came to the English throne as George I. On the suggestion of Baron Kielmannsegge, Handel wrote the "Water Music" for a fête given by the King, and this not only restored him to favour, but brought him an annuity of $1000 per annum. While in Hanover with the Elector-King, 1715-16, he composed a Passion oratorio to German text. Returning to England, he was chapelmaster to the Duke of Chandos for the next three years at Cannons, where he composed "Esther," his first English oratorio, the Chandos Te Deums, and anthems, and his second "Acis and Galatea." In 1820 he assumed direction of Italian opera for the Royal Academy of Music, for which he wrote "Radamisto." Bononcini and Ariosti went to London to compose for Handel's troop, which included the sopranist Senesino and Margarita Durastanti. The rivalry between Handel and Bononcini, in which the partisans of either camp were ranged on semi-political lines, became acute, and it was proposed that Handel, Bononcini, and Ariosti each write one act of the opera "Muzio Scevola," in order to test their merits. The test failed to end the controversy, but later Bononcini was charged with plagiarism (an offence of which Handel was frequently guilty himself) and driven from England. In 1829 Handel, in partnership with Heidegger, obtained control of the King's Theatre, for which he composed several operas, but on the production of his oratorio, "Deborah," 1733, he quarreled with Senesino, who had become immensely popular, and the rival "Opera of the Nobility," with Porpora and Hasse as composers and conductors, was the result. In 1734 Handel opened as sole proprietor at Lincoln's Inn Fields, and later at Covent Garden, producing five operas and the "Ode to Alexander's Feast," but in the end both companies became bankrupt, and Handel, a prey to overwork and worry, was stricken with paralysis of the hand, and left for Aix-la-Chapelle. Returning to London with partially restored health, he composed "Faramondo," "Serse," "Imeneo," "Deidamia" for Heidegger's opera house, and a Funeral Anthem for Queen Caroline. At 53 he turned to sacred music, conditions in England making further profit in opera impossible. "Saul" and "Israel in Egypt," his first oratorios, were by no means well received. The settings of the "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day," "L'Allegro," and "Il Penseroso" date from this period. In 1841 his fortunes seemed at their ebb, and he went to Ireland upon the invitation of the Duke of Devonshire, then Lord Lieutenant, and on April 13, 1742, his oratorio "The Messiah" was sung at a charity concert in Dublin. The following year it was performed under the composer's direction in London. The audience was deeply affected, and at the "Hallelujah Chorus" the King arose to his feet, his court following the example, and this evidence of devotion and respect has remained the rule at all subsequent performances. "Samson," "Joseph," "Semele," "The Dettingen Te Deum," "Belshazzar," "Hercules," "The Occasional Oratorio," "Judas Maccabeus," "Joshua," "Solomon," "Susanna," "Theodora," and "The Choice of Hercules" were produced between 1743 and 1750. His last work, "Jephtha," was hindered by failing eyesight, and three operations were performed in a vain effort to restore his vision. Henceforth he was almost wholly blind, but continued to play organ and to direct the performance of his works, enjoying in his old age an unrivalled popularity with all classes, especially with the royal family, to which he had been music master. His last public appearance was at a performance of "The Messiah" at Covent Garden, April 6, 1759. B. Feb. 23, 1685, Halle, Lower Saxony; d. April 14, 1759. See biographies by Schoelcher, Dr. Chrysander, Mattheson, Mainwaring, and Rockstro.

Hanover Square Rooms were the scene of many of the most important London concerts from those given by Bach and Abel, 1775 to 1874, when the building became the Hanover Square Club. The site is now occupied by Hanover Court, an apartment building.

Hans Heiling. Heinrich Marschner's three-act opera, to book which Eduard Devrient had written for Mendelssohn, was first performed May 24, 1833, at Hanover. Hans Heiling, King of the Gnomes, falls in love with Anna, a peasant girl, and determines to cast his lot with humanity, despite the protests of his subjects and of the Queen, his mother. Anna consents to a betrothal, urged by her mother, who is impressed by the gnome-king's wealth, but later finds that she really loves Conrad, a lad of her own station in life. In despair, Heiling throws a knife at Conrad, and retires to the mountains. There the gnomes find him, and learning that he has lost his chance of happiness with the mortals, offer to again recognize him as their King. Heiling reappears, however, at the wedding of Anna and Conrad, and is about to revenge himself on the bridegroom, when the Queen-mother appears and persuades him to return to his dominion beneath the earth, and as the gnomes depart the peasants join in a hymn of thanks-giving.

Hänsel und Gretel. Engelbert Humperdinck's fairy opera, to text by his sister Adelheid Wette, based on Grimm's tale, was first produced Dec. 23, 1893, at Weimar. Its success was immediate, and it has since been repeatedly performed in all parts of the world, in 1905-6 at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, when the production was supervised by the composer. To this delightful story, which ought to be familiar to every one, and is therefore not repeated here, Humperdinck has given a charming setting strictly in accordance with Wagnerian theories.

Hanslick (Eduard) wrote "Vom Musikalisch Schönen," which is a plea for absolute rather than programme music, many other books on music, criticisms for the Vienna newspapers; opposed the Liszt-Wagner movement; warmly supported Brahms; lectured on the history and æsthetics of music, Vienna University; Dr. juris, Imperial councillor and Hofrath, Chevalier of the Iron Crown. Harington (Henry, M.D.) composed glees, catches, and a sacred dirge for Passion week; was both physician and composer to the Harmonic Society of Bath on its foundation by Sir John Danvers, 1784. B. Kelston, Somersetshire, Sept. 29, 1727; d. Jan. 15, 1816, Bath.

Harmonic Flute. Flute and reed organ stops having tubes double the normal length with a hole in the centre, and of 8 ft. or 4 ft. pitch.

Harmonic Minor. Minor scale containing the minor sixth with the major seventh, in which ascent and descent are without alteration.

Harmonic Union gave concerts in London, 1852-54.

Harmonica. An instrument on the xylophone principle with strips of glass substituted for wood. Benjamin Franklin's "Musical Glasses," Armonica, or Harmonica, consisted of glass bowls set on a spindle and revolving in a trough of water by pedal action, the tone being produced by friction of the fingers.

Harmonichord. An instrument with keyboard like a piano, but producing its tone from a string set in vibration by friction with a revolving cylinder coated with rosin, invented by Kaufmann, the Dresden instrument maker. The tone was like a violin's.

Harmonici. Adhered to the Pythagorean theory of music, as opposed to that of the Aristoxenians.

Harmonics are the overtones or upper partials produced by the vibrations of the aliquot parts of a column of air or string. Recent authorities on ACOUSTICS hold that both intensity and quality of tone are dependent upon the harmonics produced.

Harmoniemusik. Ger. Music for wind instruments.

Harmonious Blacksmith is the name given to the fifth of Handel's first set of "Suites de Pièces pour le Clavecin, after the first publication, 1720, and was probably original with that composer, although the melody has been claimed for Ballard and Wagenseil. The story that Handel composed it after hearing a blacksmith at work was invented after the composer's death.

Harmonique. Fr. Harmonic.

Harmonium. A keyed wind instrument which reverses the principle of the American reed organ by forcing the air out through reeds instead of drawing in through them. It has been developed along elaborate lines by French makers, who call it the Orgue expressif.

Harmony is that branch of musical science which deals with the combination of sounds of different pitch, the formation of CHORDS, their relation and progression, and is the result of the development of instrumental music, just as counterpoint grew with the evolution of song. With the ancient Greeks harmony was a general synonym for music, but while their theory of music was highly complex, their application of the principles of harmony in the modern sense was doubtless confined to the use of a few simple chords in accompaniment. Church music was built as nearly upon the lines laid down by the Greeks as its tonal architects could make it. True, there was the beginning of harmony in DIAPHONY, DESCANT, and COUNTERPOINT, but its presence was incidental. The early composers viewed music horizontally, that is they were seeking to combine two or more melodies of nearly equal importance, not to build up an elaborate structure on perpendicular lines for the support of a single melody. Polyphonic music, the glorification of song, reached its highest perfection in Palestrina, who survived until 1592. Meantime the application of a crude harmony had been made to secular songs and instrumental music, the Italian Renaissance brought renewed interest in the dramas of ancient Greece, an attempt to revive the ancient tragedy resulted in the creation of Italian opera at Florence about 1600, and then Claude Monteverde, one of the most notable of musical reformers, sought greater freedom and larger contrast than the rules governing polyphonic music permitted, introduced combinations of sound forbidden in counterpoint, and laid the foundations of modern harmony. Monteverde brought down the wrath of the theorists by introducing the Dominant seventh without preparation, and other combinations then almost equally objectionable, so that there seemed to be an inevitable conflict between the polyphonic and harmonic systems. Nevertheless Johann Sebastian Bach found a means of reconciling them, of making the progressions of harmony as appreciable as those of melody, of which, however, they were the result. Among the more important recent works on harmony, the student will do well to consult "Harmony Simplified," Riemann; "Harmony; its Theory and Practice," Prout.

Harold. Frederic H. Cowen's four-act opera, to book by Sir Edward Malet, was first performed June 8, 1895, at Covent Garden, London.

Harp. The instrument employed in modern orchestra is generally that perfected by Sebastian Erard, 1810, having a compass of 'C flat to f''' flat with 46 strings on which sharps and flats are made by seven pedals, each of which raises a string and all its octaves either a semitone or a whole tone, and making the instrument available in all keys, though its sonority decreases in proportion to the number of accidentals used. This harp is called Double Action to distinguish it from the earlier single action harp, which was so imperfect as to be not available in many keys. The harp, with its characteristic triangular form, dates back to the dawn of history. The harp was the favourite instrument of the Irish and other Gaelic minstrels. The Double Harp had two rows of strings of different tunings. The most recent instrument of the class is that manufactured by Pleyel since 1904, which gives chromatic intervals by double stringing and does away with the pedal action.

Harp Lute. 12 stringed instrument invented by E. Light, 1798, but never in general use.

Harpe. Fr. HARP.

Son of THOMAS; d. May 18, 1869, Hillsborough, Ireland.

Harpichord. Keyboard instrument resembling the grand piano in shape, the strings being set in vibration by quills or leather points set on jacks. As the dynamic quality of the tones could not be modified by touch, there were sometimes two manuals which could be coupled or otherwise altered in tone by the use of stops. The instrument was used in accompanying the first oratorios and operas, and was not withdrawn from the orchestra until the close of the 18th century. In France it was called the Clavecin; in Italy Clavicembalo, Gravicembalo, Cembalo or Arpicordo; in German Kieflügel or Flügel. Fine specimens may be seen at the South Kensington Museum, London, Metropolitan Museum, New York, and the Conservatoire, Brussels, and the Paris Conservatoire Museum.

Three years later, while in Naples, he became the pupil of Porpora, whom he detested, and of Scarlatti, who became his real master in composition. "Sesostrato," his first Italian opera, Naples, 1726, extended his reputation, which was greatly increased by a Miserere composed while he taught at the Scuola degl' Incurabili. In 1729 he married the celebrated singer Faustina Bordoni, and two years later assumed charge of the court opera of August II at Dresden, where his opera "Alessandro nell' Indie," in which his wife took the leading rôle, established his position, despite the presence in Dresden of Porpora. In London his "Artaserse" was produced with great success, but he disliked England, and soon returned to Dresden, where he remained until 1760, when the fortunes of war compelled August II to dismiss him. At this time he had the misfortune to lose his property and a complete collection of MS. which he was preparing for publication. Haydn (Franz Joseph), "Father of the Symphony," friend of Mozart, and teacher of Beethoven, is best remembered as the composer of "The CREATION" and "The SEASONS," oratorios still sung throughout the world at music festivals, for his "AB-SCHIED," "Maria Theresa," "TOY," and other symphonies, and for numerous string quartets, a form of composition which he brought to final perfection. Born of humble parentage in Rohrau, a village near

Vienna, his talent for music showed itself at a very early age, and at eight he was admitted to the choir of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Vienna, where he remained until his voice broke, rendering him unfit for further service. Chapelmaster von Reuter does not seem to have taught Haydn anything beyond elementary singing, but he had learned enough Latin in the service of the church to understand "Gradus ad Parnassum," Fux's book on harmony upon which he founded his own method of composition. Unwilling to burden his family by returning to Rohrau, Haydn accepted the hospitality of Keller, a wig maker, whose son had been a fellow chorister at St. Stephen's. Whatever of bitterness crept into the composer's happy life in after years may be ascribed to his marriage to Maria Anna Keller, his benefactor's daughter, which occurred after he had won his first success. He had wished to marry her younger sister, who, however, entered a convent. While his fortunes were at the ebb, Haydn ran across a copy of C. P. E. Bach's six sonatas for clavier, which he studied most industriously, having procured an old clavier for his garret. In after years he always spoke of Bach with profound reverence, saying the sonatas had first awakened his intelligence in music. Despite his extreme youth and poverty-stricken appearance, Haydn managed to get pupils, and even to secure a place as church organist. He was eager to learn, and having encountered the poet Metastasio, then at work in Vienna with Porpora, who was reputed the best teacher and composer of the period, Haydn so recommended himself to the poet that he endeavoured to make Porpora accept him as a pupil. Porpora was ill, disgusted with life, and lived like a hermit. The suggestion threw him into a rage, and he began to exclaim against the ingratitude of his former pupils, citing their conduct as the reason of his refusal to teach. Undaunted by the rebuff, Haydn entered Porpora's household as a valet. His good humour and intelligence won the old master's friendship, and the coveted lessons followed. Through his connection with Porpora, Haydn quickly gained powerful friends, and at length attracted the attention of Prince Anton Esterhazy, whose service he entered, and whose successor, Prince Nicholas, made him his chapelmaster. For twenty-four years thereafter, relieved of material cares and able to work according to his own inclination, Haydn lived in the palatial residences of the Esterhazy family in Vienna, and in the provinces. His room, containing his favourite clavier, is still shown at the castle of Eisenstadt, where a large collection of his manuscript may be seen among the archives. During these years the composer's fame spread throughout Europe. In 1791 he visited London at the invitation of Salomon, where he was enthusiastically received during a sojourn of 18 months. There he produced the "SALOMON" SERIES of symphonies, which won him the degree Dr. Mus., Oxford. A second visit to England two years later found his popularity still increasing. Returning to Vienna, he conducted a few concerts, and then requested permission to retire to a little house in the suburbs which Prince Esterhazy had bought for him (Frau Haydn had fancied the place, saying she would like to spend her widowhood there, but had died first), and there he began the composition of "The Creation," a work which occupied him two years, and which he looked upon as his masterpiece, and "The Seasons." Some beautiful quartets he wrote after this period showed his creative genius unimpaired, but his health had begun to fail. His last appearance in public was at a fête given in his honour in Vienna, which has been quaintly described as "the apotheosis of a man still living." "The Creation" was performed with grand orchestra, which sounded a fanfare as the composer was carried into the concert room in his arm chair. Haydn's illness was aggravated by the second siege and occupation of Vienna by the French under Napoleon. B. Mar. 31,

1732; d. May 31, 1809. Haydn made the following catalogue of his own works in Vienna, Dec. 4, 1805: 118 symphonies, 123 divertissements for baryton (an obsolete instrument of the viol family somewhat resembling the viol da gamba, of which Prince Esterhazy was very fond), 1 for alto and violoncello, 6 duos and 12 sonatas for baryton and 'cello, 17 serenades or nocturnes (in all, 163 pieces for baryton), 20 divertissements for different instruments of 4 to 6 parts, 3 marches, 21 trios for 2 violins and bass, 3 trios for 2 flutes and 'cello, 3 sonatas for violin, with accompaniment of alto, 3 concertos for violin, 3 concertos for 'cello, 1 concerto for contrabass, 2 concertos for horn, 1 concerto for trombone, 1 concerto for flute, 1 concerto for organ, 3 concertos for clavier, 83 string quartets, 66 piano sonatas, 42 Italian duets and songs in German and English, 40 canons, 13 songs for 3 and 4 voices; Church Music, 15 masses, 4 offertories, 1 Salve Regina for 4 voices, 1 Salve for organ alone, 1 cantilena for short mass, 4 responsoria de venerabili, 1 Te Deum, 3 choruses; five oratorios, "The Return of Tobias," "Stabat Mater," "The Seven Last Words of Jesus Christ on the Cross," "The Creation," "The Seasons"; fourteen Italian operas: "La Conterina," "L'Incontro Improviso," "Lo Speciale," "La Pescatrice," "Il Mondo della Luna," "L'Isola Disabitata," "L'Infidelta Fedele," "La Fedelta Premiata," "La Vera Costanza," "Orlando Paladino," "Armida," "Acide e Galatea," "L'Infidelta Delusa," "Orfeo"; five operas for German marionettes: "Genevieve," "Philémon et Baucis," "Didon," "La Maison Brulée," "Le Diable Boiteux"; finally, 366 Scotch romances, original and retouched, and more than 400 minuets or allemandes. Even at this late day no complete catalogue of the master's works exists, or it would be given here. Breitkopf & Härtel were engaged in the publication of a complete critical edition of Haydn during 1908, and in later editions of this encyclopedia their catalogue will be reproduced. Horn. In general the name of all brass wind instruments; the French Horn is one of the most important and at the same time most difficult instruments in the modern orchestra. The Horn in F, which was first employed and is still most common in orchestra, is a tube 12 feet in length, terminating in a bell, and coiled to make it convenient for handling. The pitch may be raised or lowered by means of crooks, which thus alter the key, or by valves. The older horn could only produce the fundamental note of its tube and its harmonics. Hampl, a horn player at the court of Dresden in 1775, discovered that by introducing the hand in the bell, and touching the tube in such a way as to change the pitch, the complete chromatic scale could be produced, although the stopped or hand notes had a peculiar muffled or muted quality. The use of crooks further extended the usefulness of the instrument by making it available in all keys, and the modern valved instrument eliminates the difficulty of the stopped notes, although not so brilliant as the older instrument, while still permitting the weird effect of the muffled tones where desired. Although the upper tones are not safe, the Horn in C has a compass of C to c', and other instruments are in lower keys. In any key, however, the embouchure is the same, and for convenience to the player, it is treated as a transposing instrument, music being written in C, sounding an octave lower than written, and on the G clef, with the F clef for the lower tones. The French horn is, in its natural or valveless form, the Cor de chasse, Waldhorn, or Corno di cassetta, used for signals in hunting in France, Germany, and Italy. Louis XI, Louis XIII, Louis XV were all accredited with having invented certain of the calls still employed.

Huguenots. Giacomo Meyerbeer's five-act opera, to book by Scribe and Deschamps, was first performed Feb. 29, 1836, at the Académie, Paris. The opera opens in the banquet hall of the Count de Nevers. Raoul de Nangis, a Huguenot gentleman, is one of the guests. The gentlemen discuss their love affairs, and Raoul tells how he rescued a beautiful woman from some disorderly students. Marcel tries to persuade his master to leave the house, and the Catholic nobles find amusement in his fanatic utterances. Valentine, who is heavily veiled but is nevertheless recognized by Raoul, comes to see De Nevers, her purpose being to plead for a release from her engagement to him, but Raoul ascribes another motive to her visit. Then Urbain, the page, brings a mysterious letter to Raoul, which the others recognize as being from Marguerite de Valois, and in accordance with the page's instructions, Raoul permits himself to be blindfolded and led away to Marguerite's court. The scene changes to Marguerite's garden. The princess, whose marriage to Henry de Navarre is approaching, desires to reconcile the Catholics and Huguenots, had arranged for the marriage of Valentine and Raoul. When Raoul sees Valentine, however, he suspects that Marguerite has planned to dishonour him. He refuses to accept Valentine as his bride, and her father, Count de St. Bris, challenges him. The marriage of Valentine and De Nevers is again arranged. While praying in a chapel, Valentine overhears her father planning with Maurevert for Raoul's assassination, and she warns Marcel. A bloody encounter between the Huguenots and Catholics is averted by the timely appearance of Marguerite, and Marguerite explains to Raoul the cause of Valentine's visit to De Nevers, just as that noble appears to claim his bride. Valentine gives Raoul a final interview, which is interrupted by an assemblage of Catholic nobles to perfect plans for the Massacre of St. Bartholomew. From his concealment the Huguenot hears everything, including the refusal of De Nevers to take part in the carnage. His first impulse is to warn his co-religionists. Valentine pleads with him to remain, but honour triumphs over love, and he leaves by way of the window as the tocsin announces the beginning of the massacre. The fourth act, often omitted in performance, brings Valentine and Raoul together in a chapel. Marcel, who has been wounded, tells them De Nevers has been killed. The assembled Huguenots sing hymns, the lovers are united by the ministrations of Marcel, but a moment later the Catholic soldiery commanded by St. Bris enter the chapel, and both are slain before St. Bris can recognize his daughter. The original cast was: Valentine, Mlle. Falcon; Marguerite, organs, or wind instruments, in which the pressure was regulated by a column of water, are frequently to be met with in classic writings, but they are too vague to permit of the reconstruction of the instrument.

Hydraulus. HYDRAULICON.

Hymn Tunes in the Christian churches date back to the era of St. AMBROSE, who was the first to introduce metrical songs of praise into the church service, where the singing had previously been confined to the Psalms and Canticles. Plain Song wedded to verse acquired a measured rhythm based on poetic metre, and in this way hymn tunes exercised a most important influence in the development of modern music. The measured music thus produced continued, however, to be employed, along with the unmeasured chants which were preferable for liturgical purposes as canti fermi for the MASS, and the more ancient hymn tunes, merged in Ambrosian and Gregorian collections of chants, are, like them, of unknown authorship. In the "Hymni Totius Anni" of Palestrina, 1589, which provides a collection of hymns for all festivals of the church calendar, arranged for from three to six voices in that master's best style, the ancient hymns reached their greatest perfection. The modern hymn dates from the activities of Martin Luther, himself a writer and composer of hymns. Luther was probably the first religious leader to adapt popular secular tunes to sacred songs. The first Lutheran hymnal, in the preparation of which he assisted Johannes Walther, Wittenberg, 1524, includes the most popular tunes of the day, whether sacred or secular. "Ein' Feste Burg ist Unser Gott," the so-called "Battle Hymn of the Reformation," may be safely regarded as Luther's own, both words and music. First published in 1529, it has since been regarded as the best type of the early Protestant hymn, and as such employed as typical by many composers, including Meyerbeer and Wagner. In publishing the metrical versions of the Psalms prepared by Theodore Beza and Clement Marot, Geneva, 1542, Calvin followed Luther's policy of employing tunes already popular with the people. In England, as with the Huguenots of France, metrical versions of the psalms were received with great favour. Hymns proper, however, were unnecessary in the liturgy of the Anglican church, and the Dissenting churches were the first to cultivate hymnology along the lines laid down by Luther. The value of congregational singing having been proven by numerous religious revivals conducted by other denominations, a new interest in hymns was aroused within the Anglican Church, which now boasts as beautiful and as elaborate a hymnal as any Catholic or Protestant body.

Although fairly successful, an attempt to revive it in Dresden, 1802, failed, and subsequent attempts to restore it to favour in Vienna and Milan were equally unfortunate. The action is laid in Crete after the fall of Troy. Iliia, daughter of Priam and Electra, daughter of Agamemnon, loves Adamantes, son of King Idomeneus, who is returning from the Siege of Troy. Idomeneus vows to Poseidon in the midst of shipwreck that, if his life is spared, he will sacrifice to the sea god the first mortal he meets on landing. That mortal proves to be his son Adamantes, and as the father hesitates in the fulfilment of his oath, Poseidon sends a sea monster to ravage the coast. Adamantes kills the monster, but hearing of his father's vow, urges that he be sacrificed to the god. Iliia offers herself as her lover's substitute, and touched by such devotion, Poseidon relents, and contents himself with ordering that Idomeneus retire from the throne in favour of Adamantes, whose bride Iliia shall be.

Interrupted Cadence. False or deceptive CADENCE.

Interruzione, senza. It. Without interruption or pause.

Interval. The difference in pitch between two tones. The nomenclature of intervals has become greatly confused, owing to the fact that theorists have confounded the systems of the ancient Greeks and the mediæval church musicians with those devised by modern harmonists. The simplest and most desirable system is that which prevails in Germany, according to which intervals are reckoned upward from the tonic as shown in the following examples: C to D is a major second; C to D flat is a minor second; C to D sharp is an augmented second. The interval of the fifth becomes, if C to G, a major fifth; C to G flat, a minor fifth; C to G sharp, an augmented fifth; C to G double flat, a diminished fifth. The Greeks rated the Unison, Octave, Fifth, and Fourth as consonant and therefore more perfect intervals than Thirds or Sixths, which were dissonances. Mediæval theorists classed the Unison and Octave as perfect; the Fourth and Fifth as medium; the Third and Sixth as imperfect intervals. A later generation of theorists, whose followers are still with us, held that intervals must be classed as consonant or dissonant, or Perfect and Imperfect. The perfect Fourth, Fifth, and Eighth, and the imperfect Third and Sixth came in the first class; the Second, Seventh, and all augmented or diminished intervals in the second. Under this nomenclature a perfect Fifth flattened by an accidental would be classed as imperfect, so in this system the interval C to G flat would be called a diminished fifth. Intervals within the octave are called Simple. Intervals exceeding an octave are called Compound. Those containing tones foreign to the key are called Chromatic. Intervals between two tones of a major scale are called natural, normal, or major. Greater intervals are called pluperfect, extreme, sharp, and superfluous, or augmented.

Intimo. It. Intimate.

Intonare. It. To intone.

Intonation. The phrase preceding the reciting note in Gregorian chants; method of chanting portions of the church services indicated by accent; the production of sound by voice or instrument. Invention. J. S. Bach's name for 15 small clavier pieces; suites de pieces; creation of new melody or harmony.

Invenzione. It. Invention.

Inversion. Transposition of parts, themes, chords, or intervals. When a part is raised in COUNTERPOINT by an octave, the result is "Inversio in octavam acutam." When a part is lowered in the same manner it becomes "Inversio in octavam gravem" or "Inferiorem." Parts are often inverted at the 5th, 10th, or 12th. Themes may be inverted by being repeated backward, "Inversio Cancrizans" or retrograde inversion. A chord may be inverted as often as it has tones, the root excepted, by making an inner note serve as the bass. The inversions of an interval are produced by raising the lower tone an octave or lowering the higher tone an octave. Within the octave the inversion of an interval may be found in the difference between the known interval and the figure 9, thus a 5th inverted becomes a 4th; a 6th a 3d. Pedal Point is said to be inverted when it is transferred from the lowest to an upper part in the harmony.

Iphigénie en Aulide. Christoph Willibald von Gluck's three-act opera, to book by Bailli du Rollet, based on Racine's tragedy, was first performed April 19, 1774, at the Paris Académie. Iphigénie, daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, arrives with her mother in Aulis after Kalchas, high priest of Artemis, has announced to her father that only upon the sacrifice of Iphigénie will the Greeks be accorded a favourable breeze to waft them to Ilion. Agamemnon, torn by the conflict between his duty as a leader and his paternal love, agrees to the sacrifice. As Achilles, to whom Iphigénie is betrothed, prepares to lead her to the altar, Agamemnon's messenger announces the bride's doom. Clytemnestra appeals to Achilles to protect her daughter, and he swears to do so. Only Iphigénie seems resigned to the fate appointed her, for at the last Agamemnon determines to send his daughter and wife into hiding until the wrath of the goddess can be appeased. The people demand the sacrifice be consummated, however, and despite the pleading of Achilles and the anguish of her mother, Iphigénie permits herself to be led toward the altar. Achilles, followed by his Thessalian warriors, attempts a rescue, and as the High Priest hesitates amid the tumult, Iphigénie invokes Artemis, and the Goddess appears to tell her servant that she demands not the blood but the mind of Iphigénie, who shall become her priestess, and atone the sins of Atreus. A wind favourable to the Greeks springs up as the Goddess vanishes, and the host joyously sings Artemis' praise. Up to 1824 this opera had received 428 performances. Wagner's arrangement of the words and score was presented in Dresden, Feb. 22, 1847.

Iphigénie en Tauride. Christoph Willibald von Gluck's four-act opera, to book by Guillard, was first performed May 18, 1779, at the Paris Académie. It relates the second part of the adventures of the heroine, and is said to conform closer to the Greek tragedy than its sister opera. In this work Iphigénie is disclosed after 15 years' service as high priestess of Artemis in Tauris, where human sacrifices are the usual thing. Thoas, King of Tauris, has ordered the sacrifice of two strangers, but learning they are her countrymen, Iphigénie resolves to save one of them by sending him back as a messenger to her sister Electra. Although forewarned in a dream that her mother has been killed, and that she is in danger of sacrificing her brother, the High Priestess does not know that one of the strangers is, in fact, her brother Orestes, who, having slain their mother, has fled from home, pursued by the Furies, accompanied by his friend Pylades. The two young men generously dispute which shall carry Iphigénie's message, but by professing to be weary of life, Orestes induces Iphigénie to choose him for the holocaust, Pylades as the messenger. While Iphigénie prepares for her sacred duty the mention of her name by Orestes reveals their relationship, and the Priestess is unable to fulfil her duty. King Thoas, who has heard that one of the strangers has departed, enters to demand an explanation. Iphigénie tells him the truth, and implores him to spare the son of Agamemnon. The King resolves that both Orestes and Iphigénie shall die, but Pylades returns, accompanied by some friends, stabs Thoas, and rescues Orestes and Iphigénie, aided by the Goddess Artemis herself, who decrees the pardon of Orestes, and permits him, with his sister, Pylades, and their friends, to return to Aulis. The episodes which form the subject matter of Gluck's operas were treated as tragedy by Euripides. The stories above set forth have been set as operas by about thirty different composers. The Gluck operas have been performed probably not less than 1000 times, while the rest are wholly forgotten.

Iramente. It. Wrathfully.

Iris. Pietro Mascagni's three-act opera, to book by Luigi Illica, was first performed at the Costanzi Theatre, Rome, Nov., 1898, withdrawn for revision, and again performed at La Scala, Milan, Jan., 1899, and produced in New York under the direction of the composer, Oct. 16, 1902, and revived at the Metropolitan Opera House during the season of 1907-8. It cannot be said to have attained the popularity of "Cavaleria Rusticana," but, as interpreted by Mascagni, seemed to the writer to possess even greater merit. It is professedly Japanese in its allegory and its mysticism, and is actually so in some few melodic passages which the composer is said to have obtained from Japanese diplomats. Iris, daughter of an old blind man, or "Il Cieco," has grown to lovely maidenhood in her father's cottage, but has the misfortune to attract the attention of Osaka, a dissolute noble, who engages the pander Kyoto to bring her to his den in the Yoshiwara. The abduction is accomplished while Iris is an interested spectator at a puppet show. The girl mistakes the splendid furnishings of Osaka's bachelor quarters for paradise, but when Osaka appears, asks to be sent back to her father. Finding his wiles of no avail against the innocence of the maiden, Osaka turns her over to Kyoto, who exhibits her to the crowd in the street. Il Cieco, who is among the crowd, learns of her presence, and believing that she had gone to the Yoshiwara of her own accord, curses her, and overcome with shame and terror, Iris leaps from her window into the outlet of a sewer. In the third act scavengers, who have been working near the sewer, see the girl, but run away through fear. The egoisms of Osaga, Kyoto, and Il Cieco (in other words their spirits) comment on the situation, fulfilling the function of the old Greek chorus. Iris cries in agony, and then is heard the chorus of the Sun, with which the opera opened, and under the influence of the mighty orb flowers spring up about the girl who is lifted upward, dying but apotheosized.

His debut was made at the age of 12 at a Leipsic concert given by Mme. Viardot. Mendelssohn was his accompanist. This concert won him the friendship of Mendelssohn and an engagement at the Gewandhaus, where he played Ernst's "Otello" fantasia. In 1844, then in his 13th year, Joachim made his appearance in England at a series of concerts, in which he won instantly the friendship of the English musicians and public. Returning to Leipsic, he studied with David, Mendelssohn's concertmeister, beside whom he played in the Gewandhaus orchestra. There he remained until 1849, when he became concertmeister under Liszt at Weimar, but soon withdrew from the influences of the "Music of the Future," although without losing the esteem and good will of Liszt. The following year he organized his string quartet, the most celebrated of modern European chamber music organizations. Associated with him originally in the quartet were Ernst Schiever, 2d violin; Heinrich de Ahna, viola; and Wilhelm Muller, 'cello. Honours flowed fast upon the quartet and upon its leader in particular. Besides the degree Dr. Mus. received from Cambridge, 1877, he was decorated by many European sovereigns and honoured by several other universities. In 1889 he celebrated the 50th anniversary of his debut, but retained his grasp of musical affairs in all respects until the end. The story is the familiar Biblical narrative of Joseph's reception of his brothers when they were driven to Egypt by the famine, and his pardon of this crime. The work is still occasionally sung in German versions. The best known musical numbers are: "A peine au sortir de l'enfance," Joseph; "Dieu d'Israel," prayer for male chorus; "Ah lorsque la mort," Benjamin. G. A. Macfarren's oratorio, to Biblical text arranged by Monk, was first performed Sept. 21, 1877, at the Leeds Festival.

Next he became chapelmaster at St. Quentin, and in 1471 joined the papal chapel in Rome, where Sixtus IV then reigned. At various later periods he was court musician to Hercules Este,

Duke of Ferrara, Lorenzo Medici, of Florence, Louis XII of France, and the Emperor Maximilian I. In 1486 he was again in the papal choir under the pontificate of Innocent VIII, and in old age retired to Condé as Provost of the Cathedral Chapter. The most celebrated of Josquin's masses were: "La sol fa re mi," "Ad fugam," "De Beata Virgine," "Pange Lingua," and "Da Pacem"; a 5-part Miserere, 4-part Psalms "Planxit autem David" and "Absolon fili mi," a dirge on the death of Okeghem, and settings of the genealogies in Matthew and Luke, and 24 pieces in the 7th book of Susato's songs, 1545, are equally noteworthy. Specimens of his music may be found in the histories of Ambros, Hawkins, and Burney. Although Josquin's music reached an unparalleled popularity during his lifetime throughout Europe, his excessively florid counterpoint, and his indiscretion in employing secular themes as canti fermi, led to the suppression of his church music by a later generation, although interest in it has been recently revived. Juive. Jacques François Fromental Elias Halévy's five-act opera, to book by Scribe, was first performed Feb. 23, 1835, at the Paris Académie. There are English, German, and Italian versions. The action is laid in Constance during the early sessions of the Church council, 1414. Cardinal de Brogni rescues the Jewish goldsmith Eleazar from the death which awaits him for keeping his shop open in defiance of the Council's orders. Leopold, prince of the Empire and commander-in-chief of its armies, has fallen in love with Rachel, the beautiful daughter of Eleazar, and in order to win her love, has represented himself to be Samuel, a Jewish artist. A procession passes in which the emperor is shown surrounded by his dignitaries, but Ruggiero, the chief judge of Constance, sees the hated Jew and his daughter in the crowd, and orders their arrest. Leopold rescues them. In the second act the Jews of Constance are shown at worship in Eleazar's house. The rites are interrupted by a visit from the Princess Eudoxia, who purchases a golden chain that had once belonged to Constantine the Great, and orders the goldsmith to bring it to the palace the following day. Leopold confesses then that he is a Christian, and Rachel, in whom love has overcome filial duty, agrees to elope with him. This is prevented by the entrance of Eleazar, who has overheard the lovers. At first he is determined upon revenge, but Rachel's supplications make him agree to their marriage, and when Samuel then declines to marry Rachel, he drives him from the house. In the third act Rachel and her father go to the imperial court to deliver the chain to Eudoxia. Rachel recognizes in Prince Leopold, Eudoxia's bridegroom, her false lover, and she denounces him for having deceived her. The punishment for such relationship with a Jewess is death, and the Cardinal excommunicates Leopold, pronounces the curse upon Rachel and Eleazar, and all three are cast into prison. In the fourth act, Eudoxia visits Rachel in prison, and, moved by her prayers, Rachel agrees to retract her statement. In consequence, Leopold's sentence is reduced to banishment, but the Jewess and her father are condemned again for having conspired against a Christian. In the fifth act Rachel and Eleazar are led forth to their death. Eleazar, struggling between love of Rachel and hatred of the Cardinal, asks if she would not rather become a Christian and live in splendor. The Jewess firmly refuses, and as she plunges into the furnace, Eleazar tells the Cardinal that it is his long lost daughter he has condemned — then follows her into the flames. The original cast included: Rachel, Mlle. Cornelia Falcon; Eudoxia, Mme. Dorus-Gras; Eleazar, Nourrit; Cardinal, Levasseur.

In the modern system of music all keys are either Major, that is having semitones between the third and fourth and the seventh and eighth degrees, counting upward from the first note, which is called the Tonic; or Minor, having the semitone between the second and third degrees, ascending from the Tonic. Since any of the twelve semitones into which the octave is divided may serve as a Tonic, the relative proportion of the degrees must be preserved by sharps or flats in the signature, except in the key of C, hence called the Normal key. The signature of a major key likewise serves for its related minor key, the tonic of which is a third below. The earlier key systems are described under the headings GREEK MUSIC and MODES. Born at Mons, Hainault, Orlandus became a chorister in the Church of St. Nicholas, and it is recorded that he was thrice stolen from school because of the beauty of his voice, the third time electing to remain with his captor, Ferdinand Gonzague, then commanding the imperial army at Dizier. When Gonzague became Viceroy of Sicily he took Orlandus with him, and later to Milan. There the boy's voice broke, but under the patronage of various Italian nobles he visited Naples and Rome, in the latter city becoming director of the famous choir of St. John Lateran. In 1554 he visited England, then settled in Antwerp, but in 1556 became director of chamber music to Albert V, Duke of Bavaria, a prince noted for his love of the arts, and the founder of the royal library at Munich. In 1570 Orlandus, already married to a lady of the ducal court, was ennobled by the emperor, and later was made Knight of the Golden Spur by the Pope. Orlandus was continued in office by Duke William, son and successor to Albert, until 1587, when he was retired, but at the same time his sons Ferdinand and Rudolph were made singer and organist respectively in the ducal chapel. Afterwards Orlandus resumed his post of chapelmaster for a time, but in 1589 his career as a composer closed with the publication of six masses, including a famous "Missa pro defunctis." Early biographies of Orlandus leave the date of his birth in doubt, although that generally accepted is 1520. The name is variously spelled Orlandus de Lasso, Orlande de Lasso, Lassusius, and Orlando di Lasso. It was originally Roland Delattre, but was changed, according to Vinchant, when the composer's father was condemned for counterfeiting, a bit of scandal now believed to have been false. Leipsic is the home of the famous THOMASSCHULE, where J. S. Bach was engaged as cantor, of the celebrated GEWANDHAUS Concerts, of the publishing house of BREITKOPF & HÄRTEL, and of musical activities in many directions. The Leipsic Conservatory was founded by Mendelssohn, 1843, with the aid of 20,000 thalers bequeathed by the Hofkriegsrath Blümner to the King of Saxony for the purposes of art and science. The faculty consisted of Mendelssohn; Hauptmann, counterpoint and harmony; piano and composition, Mendelssohn and Schumann; violin, Ferdinand David; singing, Pohlenz; organ, Becker. There were 10 scholarships. Gade, Plaïdy, Richter, and Brendel were afterwards members of the faculty. J. K. Paine, Sir Arthur Sullivan, and Otto Goldschmidt have been among the most distinguished scholars. In 1908 the Conservatory still ranked with the foremost in Northern Germany, having its headquarters in its own handsome building near the GEWANDHAUS, while its affairs were managed by a directory, consisting of Justizrat Dr. Paul Röntsch, Dr. Reinhold Anschütz, Dr. Bruno Tröndlin, Albert Gruner, Dr. Adolph Geiber, Max Brockhaus, Dr. Alfred Keil, and Baurat Julius Zeibig. The faculty then consisted of the following musicians: piano, solo, and ensemble playing, Beving, Von Bose, Musikdirektor Heynsen, Keller, Dr. Merkel, Pembaur, Quasdorf, Prof. Reckendorf, Ruthardt, Schwabe, Teichmüller, Hofpianist Wendling, Frl. Leiter. Ger. The scale.

Leitereigene Akkorde. Ger. Chords peculiar to a given key.

Leiterfremd. Ger. Notes foreign to a key.

Leit-Motif. Ger. "Guiding or leading theme." In the music of Richard Wagner and his imitators this term is applied to a phrase or figure associated with an idea, character, or sentiment, and recurs as often as the composer deems it necessary to bring to remembrance the subject with which it has been thus associated. Thus in the last part of "Goetterdaemmerung" practically every leit-motif associated with Siegfried is woven into the death march. While Wagner carried the use of the device which he called leit-motif to its logical extreme, it had been propounded before his time by Berlioz, as the Idée Fixe, and is, indeed, to be found in the scores of many earlier composers.

Pupil of the Naples Conservatory, Leoncavallo's first work, "Chatterton," was completed before he had attained his majority, but the impresario having absconded, the young composer was compelled to teach singing and made tours of Europe as a pianist, in the course of which he is said to have received encouragement from Wagner. Like Wagner, he has been invariably the author of his own libretti, and his "Crepusculum" was planned on genuinely Wagnerian proportions. "Medici" was to be followed by "Savonara" and "Cesare Borgia," each dealing with an important episode of the Italian Renaissance. The scheme for this trilogy was submitted to Ricordi, who accepted the first opera, but delayed its performance. Then the composer allied himself with Sonzogno, who produced "Pagliacci," May 21, 1892, at the Teatro dal Verme, Milan. The instant and increasing popularity of this work afforded consolation for subsequent failures. The opera "Songe d'une Nuit d'Ete," songs, the symphonic poem "Seralita," and the ballet "La Vita d'una Marionetta" completed the composer's known works in 1908. B. Mar. 8, 1858; add. Naples.

In childhood a chorister, he studied harmony with Abbé Roze, becoming chapelmaster at Notre Dame, Paris, in 1786. He engaged a full orchestra and attempted to make the music of the mass "dramatic and descriptive," even composing overtures with which to open the service. Naturally he aroused opposition, his orchestra was reduced, and after two years he retired to the country. His sincerity is proved by his having taken minor orders, although declining the priesthood. The operas above mentioned and "Télémaque" won him an appointment in the école de la Garde Nationale, 1792, and on the foundation of the Conservatoire, 1795, he was made inspector, and aided Méhul, Gossec, Catel, and Langlé in preparing its first text-books. The failure of the Académie to produce his operas led him to attack Catel, and resulted in his dismissal, 1802, but two years later he became chapelmaster to the

First Consul, and when the First Consul became Emperor, Lesueur produced his "Ossian," at the inauguration of the Académie Imperiale, and received the Legion of Honor. In 1813 he became member of the Institut; and Louis XVIII made him surintendant, his composer, and professor at the Conservatoire. Besides the works named, Lesueur composed the opera "La Mort de Adam et son Apothéose," the posthumous operas "Tyrtée," "Ar-taxerse," "Alexandre à Babylon"; two composed with Persuis, "Le Triomphe de Trajan" and "L'Inauguration du Temple de la Victoire"; "L'Oratorio, ou Messe de Noël," the oratorios "Debora," "Rachel," "Ruth et Noëmi," the cantata "Ruth et Boaz," for Napoleon's marriage; three solemn masses, three oratorios for the coronation of sovereign princes, and much church music. The following year she went to Paris, where she studied with Manuel Garcia. After the rest and study prescribed by that great singing master, she returned to Stockholm, but obtaining an engagement at Berlin through the influence of Meyerbeer, who had heard her sing in Paris, she visited Dresden to learn German, and in 1844 made her debut there in Meyerbeer's "Feldlager in Schlesien." Her voice ranged from b to g", and was remarkable for both power and flexibility. She was a favourite in Berlin, and in other German cities which were soon visited. Liszt (Franz) became the world's greatest pianist; immortalized Magyar music in 15 "Rhapsodies Hongroises"; developed in the symphonic poem a new orchestral form; composed oratorios, songs, orchestral works, which rank him with the world's greatest tone poets; was the most intelligent and generous patron of music in the 19th century, befriending Berlioz, Cornelius, Raff, Schumann, and Wagner. Pupil at first of his father, Adam Liszt, steward to Prince Esterhazy, but a skilful amateur pianist, young Franz or Ferencz (to give the name its original form) made his debut at nine in Oedenburg, with the result that a group of Hungarian nobles guaranteed the family an income of 600 florins for six years in order that he might study in Vienna. There he became a pupil of Czerny, studied harmony with Salieri and Randhartinger, and at his first concert, Dec. 1, 1822, won the approval of Beethoven. In the same year his variations on a waltz by Diabelli were published along with those of Beethoven and 48 other composers, and the boy went to Paris, hoping to enter the Conservatoire. Cherubini's prejudice against child virtuosi and the fact that he was a foreigner prevented him from entering this institution, but he received lessons from Reicha and Paer, and in 1824 made his first visit to England, where he was cordially received. His operetta "Don Sanche" was performed Oct. 17, 1825, at the Paris Académie Royale, and his career as concert pianist continued with brilliant success until 1827, when the death of his father made it necessary for him to provide for his mother's support by teaching in Paris. In the French capital he formed the acquaintance of Chopin, Berlioz, von Weber, Paganini, and of such literary personages as Mme. Dudevant (to whom he introduced Chopin), Hugo, and Lamartine. There, too, he met Countess D'Agoult, a writer who signed herself "Daniel Stern," with whom he had a liaison that lasted from 1834 to 1844, during part of which period they lived in Geneva. A son and three daughters were born of this union, the youngest, at first the wife of von BÜLOW, being afterwards married to RICHARD WAGNER. In 1839 Liszt began a series of concert tours which continued 14 years, taking him to all the principal cities of Europe. It was during this period that he successfully undertook to raise money with which to complete the Beethoven monument at Bonn. In 1849 he became conductor of the court opera at Weimar, displaying as much enthusiasm for the orchestra as he had previously for piano. Weimar speedily became the musical centre of the civilized world, and so remained during the twelve years of Liszt's sojourn, owing not only to the excellence of the company which he gathered, the number of new works produced, but equally to the presence of an enthusiastic band of disciples who gathered about him. During this period he resided at a house called "Altenburg" with the Princess Karolyne zu Sayn-Wittgen-

stein, who is said to have aided him in writing his Life of Chopin, monographs on Wagner, etc. While at Weimar Liszt brought out "Lohengrin" and Tannhäuser at the request of Wagner. His piano transcriptions of Wagner's music and his essays defending and praising that composer had already conferred obligations which even Wagner acknowledged, and the encouragement and assistance, both artistic and financial, which Liszt gave him continued through life. Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," Schumann's music to "Manfred" and his "Genoève," and "Alfonso und Estrella," by Schubert, were all performed during Liszt's régime, which suddenly terminated in 1859, when Liszt withdrew, owing to a cabal formed against Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad." For the greater part of the next six years Liszt lived in Rome. As a boy, he had aspirations toward the priesthood, from which he was dissuaded with some difficulty. During his residence in Geneva he had entered the Masonic order, but his surroundings in Rome awakened the old instinct, and in 1850 he became a Tertiary of the Order of St. Francis, and in 1859 received minor orders and was presented to an honorary canonry by the Pope. The Hungarian government offered him the directorship of the Academy of Music at Pest, 1870, and he became reconciled to the court of Weimar at about the same period, and for the remainder of his life his time was divided between Rome, Weimar, and Pest, and he was accompanied to each city by a coterie of young musicians, to whom he gave lessons free of charge. His compositions during the latter part of his life were chiefly to sacred texts, "Christus" and "The Legend of St. Elizabeth" being the most notable. In 1886 he began a last triumphal tour of Europe, visiting Paris, where his "Graner Messe" was sung at St. Eustache's Church; London, where Walter Bache gave a concert exclusively of Liszt numbers, and later a performance of his "St. Elizabeth" was given in his honour; then Paris, where he heard his "St. Elizabeth" again. A tour of Holland and Germany followed, and in July he attended the marriage of his granddaughter Daniela von Bülow to Herr von Thode, in Bayreuth. July 23 he attended a performance of "Parsifal," at which he contracted a severe cold, which was aggravated by exposure incident to attending a performance of "Tristan," and developed into a fatal illness. B. Oct. 22, 1811, Raiding, Hungary; d. July 31, 1886, Bayreuth. See biography by L. Ramann, Eng. trans., 1882. Litany. Solemn supplication or prayer in which the petition is offered by the priest and response is made by the choir or congregation. The Greek Church was probably first to make use of the litany, as the words "Kyrie eleison" are retained in the ritual of the Roman Catholic Church. The Litany of Loreto was originally sung to the Plain Song melody still employed in Italian churches, but was composed by Orlandus Lassus, ten times by Palestrina, as well as by many other composers. An English version of the Litany appeared, without music, five years before the publication of the First Prayer Book, and is attributed to Archbishop Cranmer. A second publication, issued June 16, 1544, is supposed to give the Plain Song authorized by Cranmer. There are numerous settings of the English Litany, but the tendency in the Anglican Church in recent years has been to revert to Plain Song, and the Sarum version is being extensively used.

On her death he settled in Paris, marrying Countess de Larochevoucauld. B. Feb. 6, 1818, London; d. Aug. 6, 1891, near Paris. Lohengrin. Richard Wagner's three-act romantic opera, to his own book, was first performed Aug. 28, 1850, at Weimar, under the direction of Liszt. Henry the Fowler, King of Germany, holds court in Brabant, where he is levying troops to repel an invasion of the Hungarians. Gottfried, young son of the late Duke of Brabant, has mysteriously disappeared, and his sister Elsa is accused of having murdered him by Count Frederick of Telramund, who has been instigated to make the charge by his wife, Ortrud, and Telramund asserts his own claim to the duchy, as next of kin. A trial by arms is appointed by the King, but none of the nobles of Brabant oppose Telramund. Elsa, however, describes a mysterious knight she has seen in a vision, whom she prays to appear in her behalf, and then the hero is seen on the Scheldt, in a boat drawn by a swan. Elsa recognizes the knight of her dreams when he lands, and readily agrees to the conditions upon which he will defend her: first, that she will become his wife; second, that she will never ask his name or lineage. The combat results in the defeat and disgrace of Telramund. In the second act Ortrud plans revenge, and inspires Telramund to aid her. Ortrud pleads with Elsa for protection, and begins at the same time to arouse in her a distrust for her champion. In the morning, as Elsa and her knight, now Guardian of Brabant, are about to enter the church, Ortrud stops the bridal procession, claims precedence by right of superior rank, and Telramund accuses the mysterious knight of sorcery. Elsa remains true to her pledge not to ask the name or descent of her protector, the conspirators are thrust aside, and the cortège enters the church. The third act reveals the bridal chamber. Elsa, overcome by curiosity and distrust, demands to know her husband's secret. Telramund, who has meant to murder the knight, breaks into the bridal chamber, but is slain, and then, placing Elsa in charge of her ladies, her husband directs that she be taken before the King, and in the presence of the court he tells his name and rank. He is Lohengrin, Knight of the Holy Grail, and son of Parsifal. Free to remain with men so long as he shall be unknown, and invulnerable to villainy, he must now return to Monsalvat. The swan boat is seen approaching as he sings. Lohengrin takes a golden ring from the swan's neck, which he presents to Elsa with his sword and horn, but as he prepares to depart, Ortrud confesses that the swan is Gottfried, whom she had bewitched, but who would have been restored but for his sister's curiosity. At this Lohengrin offers a prayer to heaven, unchains the swan, which disappears beneath the waters, and is replaced by Gottfried. The boy rushes to his sister, who faints in his arms as a dove descends and draws away the boat containing Lohengrin. The original cast included: Lohengrin, Beck, ten.; Telramund, Milde, bar.; King Henry, Hofer, bass; Elsa, Frau Agathe, sop.; Ortrud, Fr. Fastlinger, con. London, the capital of the British Empire in music as in all things else, was the seat in 1908 of the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, of the ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, the GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC, and of societies for the cultivation of musical art, most of which are here described under separate titles. Of its many handsome theatres those which have been chiefly identified with serious art were COVENT GARDEN, LYCEUM, DRURY LANE, the Haymarket, etc., of which the first-named was devoted to opera in 1909. The London Musical Society gave choral and orchestral concerts from 1878 to 1887. Barnby and Mackenzie were the conductors. London Philharmonic Society was founded 1813 by J. B. Cramer, P. A. Corri, and W. Dance to give orchestral and instrumental subscription concerts, a purpose ever since worthily fulfilled. Among the most notable foreign composers who have directed their own works at these concerts, often expressly composed for the occasion, have been Cherubini, Spohr, Weber, Mendelssohn, Hiller, Wagner, and Gounod. Beethoven composed for it, and was its beneficiary. The Society has a large library, has published its documents and letters from time to time, and its earlier history may be learned from "The Philharmonic Society of London from its Foundation, 1813, to its 50th Year." George Hogarth, London, 1862. London Sacred Philharmonic Society gave concerts from 1848 to 1856 in Exeter Hall, London. Mr. Surman was conductor.

The mother interrupts their courtship, dismisses the lover, and gives Louise a scolding. The father returns. He has received a letter from Julien, with whom he is inclined to be in sympathy, but the violent opposition of the mother, based upon Julien's bad reputation, settles the matter, and Louise is obliged to promise her father she will see Julien no more. Julien, in the next act, plans to abduct Louise, waylays her as she goes to her work, and again begs her to run away with him, but she refuses. A change of scene reveals the interior of a dressmaking establishment. The chatter of the girls is interrupted by Julien, singing a serenade to the accompaniment of his guitar. The other girls are delighted, but when Louise does not appear Julien breaks the strings of his instrument and is silent. Louise professes to have become suddenly ill, and leaves, but her companions, looking from the window, see her going off with Julien. In the third act Julien and Louise are shown in a garden on the heights of Montmartre. Julien pleads his love, the right of individual choice; Louise defends her parents, but is at last convinced that it is right for her to unite her life with that of Julien. Then Julien's friends arrive, and there is a scene of festivity as they crown Louise "Muse of Montmartre." The Mother comes, and the guests depart. Louise, hearing that her father is seriously ill, consents to return home, promising Julien she will return. In the fourth act Louise hears her father declaim against the ingratitude of children, and listens to her mother's tirade against Julien while she helps her in the kitchen, but she still pines for freedom and her lover. Enrico (Sir Henry Ashton of Lammermoor) seeks to restore the family fortunes by marrying his sister Lucia (Lucy) to Arturo (Lord Arthur Bucklow), and is enraged to find that she loves Edgardo (Sir Edgar Ravenswood), his greatest enemy. Lucia and Edgardo meet in the park, and Edgardo, who has been appointed ambassador to France, tells Lucia that although he has sworn to revenge himself on Enrico for having killed his father and robbed him of his fortune, love has so changed him that he desires to be reconciled to his enemy. The lovers swear eternal fidelity as the act closes. In the second act Enrico, who has intercepted the correspondence of Edgardo and Lucia, shows his sister a forged letter which she accepts as proof that Edgardo has been false to her. Then Enrico urges the suit of his friend Arturo, to which she at last consents. The moment the marriage contract has been signed, Edgardo enters to claim Lucia as his bride. Bloodshed is averted by the intercession of Raimondo (Raymond Bide-the-Bent). Edgardo denounces Lucia for her faithlessness, and is ordered from the castle by Enrico and Arturo. In the third act Raimondo announces that Lucia, in a fit of insanity, has slain her husband, and is herself dying. Lucrezia Borgia. Gaetano Donizetti's three-act opera, to book by Romani based on Hugo's play, was first performed at La Scala, Milan, 1834. Lucrezia Borgia, now wife of Alfonso, Duke of Ferrara, goes to Venice to see her son, Gennaro, of whose existence the Duke is ignorant, and whom she had caused to be brought up by a Venetian fisherman.

Gennaro has risen to high rank in the Venetian army and is a guest at the Barberigo Palace, where a festival is taking place when the curtain rises. Orsini and others of Gennaro's friends declaim against the crimes of the Borgias, and finally leave Gennaro asleep. Then Lucrezia enters, charmed with the manly beauty of her son, and when he awakens, listens with delight to the story of his adventures. Gennaro is pleased with his beautiful visitor, and is imploring her to tell him her name when his friends return, and at once denounce her as the infamous Borgia. The second act opens in Ferrara. Gennaro, who has been taunted by his friends with being Lucrezia's lover, tears down her arms from the Ducal palace, and the Duke, who also suspects the young man of being his wife's lover, causes his arrest. Enraged at the insult, and not knowing its author, Lucrezia demands that he be apprehended and put to death. The Duke readily assents, and Lucrezia is horrified to learn that it is her son whose condemnation she has brought about. She implores the Duke to pardon him, but the Duke replies with an outburst of jealous rage, and will only agree that Lucrezia may choose the manner of Gennaro's death. Lucrezia then causes the young man to drink the famous poisoned wine of the Borgias, and when the Duke departs, gives him an antidote. His life thus saved, she begs him to return to Venice. The third act represents the banquet hall in the Negroni palace. Instead of returning to Venice, Gennaro has accompanied his friend Orsini to the banquet. Not knowing this, Lucrezia poisons the wine, and in the midst of the revelry tells the guests, the group of young men who had insulted her in Venice, she has done so in return for their former hospitality. Draperies are drawn aside revealing five coffins. Gennaro presents himself and asks for the sixth. His mother is overcome with horror, but offers Gennaro the antidote, which he declines, even when she reveals herself as his mother, on the ground that there is not sufficient to save his friends. Gennaro expires in her arms as the Duke enters, Lucrezia at last proclaims her relationship to the young Venetian, and dies, exclaiming that Heaven has passed judgment upon her. Hugo forbade the performance of the opera in Paris, and it was necessary to rewrite the libretto, call it "La Riniegata," and transpose the action from Italy to Turkey before it could be resumed. In London it served as the vehicle of Mario's debut, Dec. 30, 1843. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Nelle fatal di Rimini," Orsini; "Com' è bello," Lucrezia; "Di pescatore ignobile," Gennaro; "Chi siam noi sol chiarirla," chorus finale; Act II: "Vieni la mia vendetta," the Duke; "O! a te bada," Lucrezia and the Duke; Act III: "Il segreto per esser felici," Orsini.

Lulli (Jean Baptiste) composed "Les Fêtes de l'Amour et de Bacchus," Paris Académie de Musique, Nov. 15, 1672, which marked the beginning of French opera; dominated the music of France from that year until his death, owing to the favour of Louis XIV, who transferred to him the control of the opera which had previously been given Abbé Perrin, made him music master to the royal family, court composer, surintendant, royal secretary, and raised him to the nobility as the "Sieur de Lully." Although of humble birth, according to some writers, Lulli was described in the letters of naturalization granted in 1661 as the son of Lorenzo de' Lulli, a Florentine gentleman. He received his first lessons in music from a Franciscan monk, and when still a child was taken to France by the Chevalier de Guise to instruct his niece, Mlle. de Montpensier, in Italian. Instead of becoming her teacher, he was placed in the kitchen as a scullion, but was promoted to the band after Count de Nocent had discovered his proficiency on the violin. There he remained several years, when a satirical song he had composed at the expense of Mlle. de Montpensier came to her ears, and he was dismissed. Fortunately the king had heard him play, and he at once became a member of the "Twenty-four Violins." The inability of this band to play Lulli's compositions led to the formation of "Les Petits-Violons" under leadership of Lulli, and eventually to the destruction of the CONFRÉRIE DE ST. JULIEN, which had monopolized and almost destroyed practical musicianship in the realm. Lulli made the "Petits-Violons" the best orchestra in France, and meantime studied theory, singing, and harpsichord most industriously. The song "Au clair de la Lune," dance music, and church pieces spread his fame as a composer, and at length he was asked to compose the ballets in which Louis XIV delighted to take part with the ladies and gentlemen of the court. In these entertainments Lulli himself danced beside the king. From 1658 to the beginning of his career as director and composer of opera, Lulli composed about 30 of these ballets, Molière supplying the action. 20 operas followed the transference of the patent for the Académie de Musique to Molière, all to books provided by the poet Quenault. He ruled with an iron hand. By the king's orders no opposition was permitted, and Lulli saw that the king's orders were enforced. In 1664 he had married the daughter of Michael Lambert, who brought him 20,000 livres, his income was 30,000 livres from various appointments, and he left an estate valued at the equivalent of $54,000, besides four houses in the fashionable part of Paris. Death resulted from an abscess on his foot, caused by having struck it with the baton while conducting a Te Deum, Jan. 8, 1687, in celebration of the king's return to health. Besides the opera named, Lulli composed "Cadmus et Hermione," "Alceste," "Thésée," "Le Carnaval," "Alys," "Isis," "Psyche," "Bellérophon," "Proserpine," "Le triomphe de l'Amour" (ballet), "Persée," "Phaëton," "Amadis de Gaule," "Roland," "Idylle sur la paix" (divertissement), "L'Eglogue de Versailles" (divertissement), "Le Temple de la Paix" (ballet), "Armide et Renaud," "Acis et Galatée," one act of "Achille et Polyxène," symphonies, motets for double choir, a Miserere, a Libera, and other church music, songs, and violin solos. B. about 1633, Florence; d. Mar. 22, 1687. See "Lulli musicien," by Le Prévost d'Exmes. Louis composed the operas "Zéphire et Flore" (with Jean Louis), "Orphée," 1690; "Alceste" or "La Mort d'Hereule" (with Marais) and the ballet "Les Saisons" (with Colasse). B. The back is pear-shaped, instead of flat, as with guitars, and the superior beauty of the lute, which was often ornamented with the most exquisite inlays of rare woods, mother-of-pearl, and ivory, and with paintings on the sound-board, caused many of them to be preserved for decorative purposes. There were from four to thirteen pairs of strings, either in unison or the octave, but the six stringed variety was that chiefly used, and for this the tuning was G, c, f, a, d', g'. This tuning for an eleven stringed lute has been preserved C, D, E, F, G, A, d, g, b, e', a'. The five lowest strings in the latter example were open and could not be stopped with the fingers. Then, after a few lessons from Lefort, studying at the Hoch Conservatory would look made a protégé of him and until he had him in a room for hours, all musical problems worked out the most apt. On Heymann's resignation MacDowell was post-unsucessful candidate for principal piano but in 1881 was made principal Conservator in the Darmstadt Conservatory, later returning to Frankfurt as a teacher, but without official connections. He was taken to a retreat in the country, where the devotion of his wife and friends gave him complete repose; but all efforts proved unavailing, and he died shortly after his return to the city which had been the scene of his best efforts. Fourth in descent from a family of musicians in Edinburgh, young Mackenzie was sent to Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, where he studied violin with Ullrich and theory with Stein, playing under the latter gentleman in the ducal orchestra, and becoming familiar with the scores of Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner. Returning to Edinburgh, he was soon in London as a pupil of Santon, on whose advice he competed for and won the King's scholarship in the Royal Academy of Music. He played occasionally in orchestra and chamber concerts, and became conductor of the Scottish Vocal Music Association in 1873, and precentor in St. George's church. "Cervantes," an overture which was his first important composition, was produced by von Bülow, launching Mackenzie as a composer; but hard work during the next three years injured his health, and he settled in Florence, making only occasional visits to England until his appointment to the Royal Academy of Music forced him to abandon his residence there. Mackenzie conducted the performance of "St. Elizabeth" which induced Liszt's last visit to England, and introduced Tchaikovsky's "Symphony Pathétique" to the English public. In 1903 he made a successful tour of the Dominion of Canada as a "prima donna conductor." This institution has exerted a powerful influence on the musical art, not only of all Spain but likewise of Portugal and the Latin-American countries, and has promoted a multitude of musical organizations in all parts of the Peninsula. Madrid has been the chief seat of opera in Spain for nearly two centuries, and possesses a splendid Royal Opera House, which shares the honors with that of Barcelona. There are numerous societies in the Capital which give concerts of choral, orchestral, and chamber music.

Madrigal. Secular song, consisting of a short pastoral or love poem, set in contrapuntal style for two or more voices without instrumental accompaniment, cultivated by mediæval church musicians, and naturally constructed in the church Modes. With the decay of minstrelsy the art of music was left wholly to the church. It seems probable that the early Flemish composers were the first to develop the madrigal, but it is certain that the first publications were made in Italy, about 1501, and that imitators sprang up in every part of Europe, with the result that a wealth of polyphonic vocal music was created nearly equal to that which grew up about the Mass. The difficulty with which modern singers perform these works is proof that the art of singing had reached its highest perfection before the birth of instrumental music.

Madrigal Society, founded in London by John Immyns, 1741, gave concerts at which madrigals were performed, a supper was served, and the evening was frequently concluded with catches and other lighter vocal music. The original membership was 16. In 1908 the membership was restricted to 40, the society continued to flourish, and claimed to have the longest continuous history of any musical organization in the world. In the last generation the Earl of Beauchamp, Otto Goldschmidt, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Lord Alverstone, and Sir Frederick Bridge served as president, and the musical directors were Otto Goldschmidt, Sir John Stainer, and Sir Frederick Bridge.

Magyars. The dominant race of Hungary, although established there since the 9th century, is of Oriental origin, having descended from the Scythians, who had immigrated from Mongolia. The Magyars were thereafter the chief landowners, and the Gypsies, another race of Oriental extraction, became the musicians, reflecting in what has come to be known as Magyar or Hungarian music the idioms of either race. As a result the folk music often follows a system of intervals more nearly akin to Asia than to Western Europe, is frequently syncopated, and possesses peculiarities of ornamentation as well as rhythm both charming and distinctive. Haydn was the first great composer to employ Magyar themes, an example followed by Joachim and Brahms and notably by Liszt, whose Rhapsodies, "Hungaria" and "St. Elizabeth," have spread the fame of Magyar music throughout the world.

Malibran (Maria Felicita) possessed a con. voice with a superadded sop. register, which she used with such intelligence and spirit as to become the most celebrated woman singer of her generation. Daughter of the famous ten. and impresario MANUEL GARCIA, who was her chief instructor, she played a child's part in Naples at five in Paer's "Agnese," and undertook the prima donna's rôle, to the delight of the audience. Herold gave her some lessons on the piano, and she had some singing lessons from Panzeron in childhood, but in 1816 she accompanied her family to Paris, studied with her father, and made her operatic debut in London, June 7,

1825, where she received $2500 for a six weeks' engagement. The family then removed to New York, where the singer was heard with great enthusiasm. Her marriage to Malibran, a French merchant, took place Mar. 25, 1826, against her wishes, and when her husband became bankrupt shortly afterwards, she fled to Paris. There she became a favourite singer at the Italian opera, and began a series of triumphal engagements in London, Naples, Milan, receiving a contract for 185 performances at La Scala with 450,000 francs compensation. In 1830 she formed an attachment for Charles de Beriot, with whom she established a home near Brussels, marrying him after securing a divorce from Malibran, 1836. While filling an engagement in London, Mme. In early life a music teacher, Mälzel invented an automatic instrument which played flutes, trumpets, strings, drums, etc., which he sold for 3000 francs, and then made a larger one which also imitated clarinets, violins, and 'cellos. This he called the Panharmonicon. Having bought Kempelen's automatic chess player, he exhibited these and other mechanical inventions, which won him an appointment at the Vienna court. In Vienna he met Beethoven, for whom he made an ear trumpet, and to whom he suggested the plan of the "Battle Symphony." A quarrel with Beethoven over the ownership of this piece culminated in a law suit, but when Mälzel returned to Vienna with his Metronome, 1817, the matter was compromised. The remainder of Mälzel's life was spent in touring and exhibiting his inventions, and he made two visits to the West Indies and one to the United States, finally dying aboard the American ship Otis. An amateur orchestra furnished the instrument music of the Gentlemen's Concerts until 1850, when Charles Hallé became the leader. Seven years later arrangements for a permanent orchestra were perfected, and with the exception of the season of 1860-61, when no concerts were given, Hallé was in charge during the remainder of his life. On the death of Sir Charles Hallé, 1895, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir C. Villiers Stanford, Dr. F. H. Cowen, Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. Brodsky, and George Henschel conducted the first season, and in 1896-97 Dr. Cowen was sole conductor. Thereafter the concerts were conducted by Dr. Richter. His success in this theatre led to his appointment as principal of the Liceo, conductor at the Teatro Comunale and chapelmaster at San Petronio, Bologna, where he remained until 1886, when he visited London and gained employment as composer and conductor. Then he entered a regimental band at Dantzic, played violin in the theatre, and began to arrange and compose music. Finally he obtained a transfer to Gungl's Orchestra in Berlin, and then became solo violinist and conductor at Kroll's Garden, Berlin. Massenet's three-act opera, to book by Meilhac and Gille, was first performed Jan. 19, 1884, at the Paris Opéra Comique. The first act represents an inn, at which Manon arrives under the escort of her cousin Lescaut, who is charged with placing her in a convent. Guillot Monfontaine, an old beau, is smitten with her charms, but she meets the Chevalier des Grieux, with whom she immediately falls in love and elopes. Bretigny and Lescaut, the former another of Manon's lovers, reach Paris in the second act, searching for the missing beauty. Manon has already wearied of Grieux, and although he promises to marry her, decides that he is not wealthy enough to provide the luxuries she craves, and on learning that a scheme is afoot to tear Grieux from her, readily consoles herself by taking up with Bretigny. The third act represents an open air fête in the gardens of the Cours de la Reine, at which Manon and Bretigny are enjoying themselves. Manon learns that Grieux is about to enter the church. Her passion for him revives, she finds him at the Seminary of St. Sulpice, and prevails upon him to abandon the sacred profession and return to her. In the last act Grieux and Guillot are gambling. Manon watches the play, and grows more and more affectionate toward Grieux as he wins Guillot's money. But Guillot, in order to revenge himself upon Manon, has made charges which result in a raid by the police, and Grieux and Manon are placed under arrest. Grieux is saved from ignominy by his father's money, but Manon is sentenced to deportation, and dies of exhaustion in her lover's arms while on the road to Havre. This opera, known simply as "Manon," was sung at the New York Academy of Music, Dec. 23, 1885; in English, by the Carl Rosa Company the same year, and later in French at Covent Garden, London. Giacomo Puccini's four-act opera to the title "Manon Lescaut" was first performed Feb. 1, 1893, at Turin. In Puccini's opera, which professes to adhere with as much fidelity as dramatic form permits to Abbé Prévost's novel of the same title, Manon, in charge of her brother Lescaut, meets Des Grieux, who is destined for the church, deserts him for Geronte de Ravoire, the old voluptuary, but after her arrest, Des Grieux manages to get aboard the ship in which Manon is deported to America. The third and last act, therefore, takes place on "a vast plain on the borders of the territory of New Orleans." The climate of the new world does not agree with Manon, who is overcome with fever. She dies, and Des Grieux falls senseless over her body.

A visit to Pressburg and Vienna with Count von Amadée led to an acquaintance with Kotzéluch, Beethoven, and von Weber. versions. In the English version the action is laid in Richmond during Queen Anne's reign. Lady Henrietta, wearied of her duties at court, disguises herself as a maid servant, and accompanied only by Nancy, her own maid, and her aged admirer, Sir Tristan, who is to be known as her cousin John, visits the fair at Richmond, where as Martha she seeks employment. Plunkett and his brother by adoption, Lionel, two prosperous young farmers, are seeking just such willing servants as Martha and Nancy profess to be. The women jokingly accept the handsel or earnest money, which, as the Sheriff tells them, actually binds them to a year's service, and are compelled to accompany the farmers to their place, upon which Sir Tristan deserts them in despair. In the second act, which takes place at the farmhouse, the new maids prove utterly useless as servants, but, quite naturally, Lionel falls in love with Martha and Plunkett with Nancy. The women are relieved of the complications which follow by Sir Tristan, who carries them away in a coach, leaving the young farmers disconsolate. At a court hunt the farmers recognize their servants in the Queen's suite, but Lady Henrietta and Nancy repudiate their claims. Lionel tells the whole story of their transaction at Richmond, but is ordered to prison by Sir Tristan. Remembering that his father had given him a ring which should guard him from misfortune, Lionel hands the jewel to Plunkett, with instructions to give it to the Queen. By this means it is discovered that Lionel is son and heir to the late Earl of Derby, who had been unjustly deprived of his estate, which the Queen is ready to restore to his successor. Lady Henrietta, who has really fallen in love with the handsome young farmer, offers him her hand, but he refuses until she presents herself at the Richmond Fair, again disguised as Martha. Then, of course, the lovers are united, and Plunkett wins his Nancy. The original cast included: Martha, Anna Zerr, sop.; Lionel, Ander, ten.;

Plunkett, Carl Formes, bass. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Of the Knights so brave and charming," Martha and Nancy; "Lost, proscribed, an humble stranger," Lionel; Act II: "When the foot the Wheel turns lightly," quartet, the interpolated Irish melody "The Last Rose of Summer," Martha; "Midnight Sounds" (Goodnight Quartet); Act III: "I want to ask you," Plunkett; "Like a Dream bright and fair," Lionel; "Here in deepest forest shadows," Martha.

Maryland was the title of the song written by James Ryder Randall to the tune "Lauriger Horatius" which has since become the hymn of the State of Maryland, and one of the most popular of Southern songs in all parts of the United States. It expressed the resentment of the Confederates at the occupation of Maryland by the Federal troops, called upon the Marylanders to "spurn the Northern scum," and was received with great favor throughout the Confederate army. Mr. Randall was then a mere boy. He served with the Southern forces and then embarked in journalism, and was still engaged in that profession in Virginia in 1908.

Marylebone Gardens were attached to a London tavern originally known as "The Rose of Normandy," and occupied parts of what are now Beaumont and Devonshire streets and Devonshire Place. From about 1659 to 1776 the gardens were used for various kinds of public entertainments, including concerts and burlettas.

Masaniello. Daniel F. E. Auber's five-act opera, to book by Scribe and Delavigne, better known in Europe as "La Muette de Portici" or "La Muta di Portici," was first performed Feb. 29, 1828, at the Paris Académie. The action takes place at Naples, the first act opening upon the wedding festivities of Princess Elvira and Alphonso, son of the Duke of Arcos. Fenella, a dumb girl, interrupts the gaiety by imploring in pantomime protection from one of the nobles of the court who has caused her to be imprisoned. Elvira promises to care for Fenella, who discovers her persecutor in Alphonso. Unable to enter the chapel where the ceremony is performed, Fenella denounces Alphonso to his bride as they return from the altar. Masaniello, brother of Fenella, is seen in the second act encouraging the fishermen with song, while they are busy with boats and nets. Fenella tries to throw herself into the sea, but is rescued by Masaniello. Still in dumb show, the girl tells the story of her wrongs, Masaniello vows vengeance, and urges his friends to aid in effecting a revolution. The third act represents the market place of Naples. Selva, an officer of the Duke, attempts to arrest Fenella, and at a signal from Masaniello the revolt begins. In the fourth act, Fenella and Masaniello are shown in their cottage at the close of day. Pietro enters to tell Masaniello that Alphonso has escaped, and Masaniello and his lieutenant have hardly left the cottage when Alphonso and Elvira enter, appealing to Fenella for shelter. The dumb girl determines to save her false lover and his bride, and when Masaniello returns, he confirms her promise, although Pietro protests. The act closes with the proclamation of Masaniello as King of Naples. In the fifth act Masaniello becomes insane from poison administered by Pietro, and hearing that an army is approaching to attack the city, rushes forth to lead his band of patriots and is killed in battle. Mt. Vesuvius is in eruption. Fenella, hearing of her brother's death, unites Elvira and Alphonso and plunges to her death in the burning lava. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "O bel Momento," Elvira; Act II: "Piu bello sorse il giorno," Masaniello; "Sara il morir," Masaniello and Pietro; Act III: "Il pianto rasciuga," Elvira; "Nume del Ciel," chorus; Act IV: "Dio! di me disponesti," Masaniello; "Scendi, o sonno dal ciel" (Slumber Song), Masaniello; Act V: "Ve' come il vento irato," Pietro. So admirably is the Neapolitan revolt of 1647 against the foreign rule of Spain depicted in this opera that its performance in Brussels, 1830, is said to have occasioned the beginning of the struggle for the independence of Belgium.

Mascagni (Pietro) composed "CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA," "IRIS," and other less successful operas, "Hymn in Honor of Admiral Dewey, U. S. N.," July, 1899, Schiller's "Ode to Joy," incidental music for Hall Caine's play "The Eternal City"; ranked with the most successful composers of the "Young Italian" school. Mascagni's first lessons in music at the Instituto Luigi Cherubini of his native town, Leghorn, were obtained without the knowledge of his father, a baker, who intended bringing up his boy to his own trade. The intervention of an uncle made it possible for him to continue his lessons after his father discovered how he had been "wasting" his time, and a C minor symphony and a Kyrie in celebration of Cherubini's birthday were performed at the Instituto in the composer's 16th year. "In Filanda," composed when he was 18, received honourable mention at a prize competition for cantatas in connection with the International Exhibition at Milan. The "Ode to Joy," 1881, led to an offer from Count de Larderel to defray Mascagni's expenses at the Milan Conservatory. He does not seem to have profited by the routine there, and soon joined a travelling orchestra with which he spent several years, finally settling in Cerignola as a teacher in the municipal music school. "Cavalleria Rusticana" won first prize in the competition arranged by the publisher Sonzogno, 1889, and was performed May 18, 1890, at the Costanzi Theatre, Rome, where its instantaneous success was followed by performances throughout the world. Medals were struck in Mascagni's honour when he revisited Leghorn, and he was made Knight of the Crown of Italy. Other operas followed in rapid succession, "L'Amico Fritz," "I Rantzau," "Guglielmo Ratcliff," "Silvano," "Zanetto," "Iris," "Le Maschere," 1901; none of which, however, attained the degree of popularity reached by "Cavalleria Rusticana." In 1895 he was appointed director of the Pesaro Conservatory, but lost that post by a prolonged tour of the United States, 1903, — a most harassing and unfortunate experience, since the composer was subjected to legal annoyances, and what was more serious, found himself without adequate support wherewith to make his later operas known. On returning to Italy, Mascagni organized an orchestra and resumed his work as teacher and composer, and received the additional honor of Commander of the Crown of Italy. B. Dec. 7, 1863; add. Rome.

Mascheroni (Eduardo) composed the operas "Lorenza," Teatro Costanzi, Rome, 1901; "La Perugina," 1906; Requiem for King Victor Emmanuel; conducted opera at Leghorn, Rome; pupil of Boucheron, Milan. B. Sept. 4, 1857, Milan; add. Milan.

Masque. Dramatic entertainments of which Milton's "Comus" is the most perfect type in which the lines were sung or declaimed to music by players who (originally, at least) wore allegorical masks.

Mass. Ger. Time, measure.

Mass. The Communion Service of the Roman Catholic Church may be said by the Celebrant, attended by a single server, in which case it is a Low Mass, and without musical accompaniment, although it is not forbidden that the congregation may chant hymns or litanies in connection with the service, of which, however, they form no part. Where the Office is chanted by the Celebrant and a choir, it becomes a Missa Cantata, or Sung Mass. Where the Office is sung by the Celebrant, Deacon, and Subdeacon with the aid of a choir, it becomes a High or Solemn Mass. The word is derived from the Latin formula "Ite Missa Est," with which the congregation is dismissed. Apart from the chants reserved for the clergy, the portions of the Mass which have been sung to music from Apostolic times are the KYRIE, GLORIA, CREDO, SANCTUS, BENEDICTUS, and AGNUS DEI. The chants of Plain-Song melodies to which these portions of the Mass were sung were first collected and arranged by St. Ambrose of Milan in the latter quarter of the 4th century, and thenceforth called AMBROSIAN CHANT. A larger collection was made at Rome toward the close of the 6th century during the pontificate of St. Gregory the Great, and is hence called GREGORIAN CHANT. It is probable that no other music was employed for the Mass until the 15th century, for, while the art of Counterpoint had gradually developed, the ancient chants were still exclusively employed as the Canti-fermi for polyphonic settings of the liturgy until Dufay, who sang in the papal chapel, 1428-37, introduced the practice of wedding sacred text to profane melody. The abuse spread quickly, and the great contrapuntists of the early Netherlands school not only followed this example, but often forgot the purpose of the ceremony in efforts to display their ingenuity in counterpoint and fugue. The secularization and profanation of church music was condemned at the Council of Trent, and in 1564 a commission of Cardinals appointed by Pope Pius IV was preparing to prohibit all polyphonic music in the churches, but were deterred from going to this extreme by hearing the great "Mass of Pope Marcellus" and two other masses which Palestrina had composed to prove that reverence and devotion might be combined with art. The Cardinals, hearing the "Mass of Pope Marcellus" sung June 19, 1565, in the Sistine Chapel, recorded it as their opinion that all church music should follow the style it established,—in a word, that polyphonic music had here reached its most perfect and most beautiful development,—a decision accepted by the world at large today. To the age of Palestrina succeeded that of Monteverde. To the art of combining melodies for voices, note against note, succeeded that of devising new and hitherto forbidden harmonies for instruments. The greatest era of ecclesiastical music closed, and that of dramatic music began. The Masses of Bach, B minor, and of Beethoven, in D, were rather oratorios than compositions suitable for the worship of the church. As for the rest, from Mozart to Gounod, composers lavished melody and rich instrumentation upon the Mass, but their music was operatic rather than sacred. In Rome itself the venerable music approved by tradition was retained. Elsewhere the operatic music, often sung in operatic style by opera singers, was permitted until, in 1903, Pope PIUS X commanded a return to the Gregorian Plain-Song, the elimination of operatic music from the churches, and the dismissal of women from the choirs. Such revolutionary changes could not be effected immediately. It was found necessary to train new singers for the older music, but the salutary effect of the reform was soon generally recognized except by those whose material interests had been affected.

Prize pupil of the Paris Conservatoire in piano, harmony, and fugue at 12, he studied composition with Halévy, and in 1844 won the prix de Rome with his cantata "Le Rénégat." His first operatic work, "La Grand' tante," was performed on his return to Paris, 1867, at the Opéra Comique. Son of a cook, Méhul obtained his first music lessons from a blind organist, and at 10 was himself organist of the convent at Givet. Later he entered the monastery of Lavaldieu as pupil of Wilhelm Hauser, to whom he was made deputy organist at 14. The following year he settled in Paris, maintaining himself by giving lessons, and studying with Edelmann. A sacred cantata performed at a Concert Spirituel, 1782, was his first notable composition, but at the suggestion of Gluck, he devoted himself to opera. His first three works are lost, but the fourth, "Cora et Alonzo," was accepted by the Académie, though not performed until he had established his reputation with "Euphrosine et Coradin," an opéra comique performed at the Théâtre des Italiens, Sept. 4, 1790. Other operas followed in rapid succession: "Stratonice," "Le jeune Sage et le vieux Fou," "Le Jugement de Paris" (with Haydn and Pleyel); "Horatius Cocles," "Mélidore et Phrosine," "La Caverne," "Doria," "Le jeune Henri," "Adrien," "Ariodant," "Epieure" (with Cherubini), "Bion," "L'irato," "Une Folie," "Le Trésor supposé," "Joana," "L'Heureux malgré lui," "Helena," "Le Baiser et la Quittance" (with Kreutzer, Boieldieu, and Nicolo), "Les deux aveugles de Tolède," "Gabrielle d'Estrées," culminating with "Joseph," 1807, and "Uthal." His ballets, "Le Retour d'Ulysse," "Persée et Andromède," "La Dansomanie," "Daphnis et Pan-drose," were well received, as were his songs and cantatas, "Chant national du 14 Juillet," "Chant du Départ," "Chant du Retour," "Chanson de Roland," "Chant lyrique," and "Le Pont de Lodi." His unpublished works included six operas, a mass, composed for Napoleon's coronation, first performed in Paris, 1879, and the opéra comique, "Valentine de Milan," completed by Daussigne-Méhul, produced in Paris, 1822. Méhul also composed symphonies, which, however, are deemed inferior to his overtures, choruses to the tragedy "Timoléon," the ballet "Les Amazons," and "La Journée aux Aventures," 1816. This brilliant career brought him the cross of the Legion of Honor and membership in the Institut. B. Givet, Ardennes, June 22, 1763; d. Oct. 18, 1817, Paris.

FUGUE.

Meistersinger. Ger. "Mastersinger." The title of highest rank in the song schools or guilds which flourished in Germany from 1311, when Heinrich von Meissen is supposed to have established the first of its kind in Mainz, until comparatively recent times. The organizations were to the middle classes of Germany what those of the MINNESINGERS had been to the nobility, and were doubtless of great value as a means of extending musical culture. An account of Wagner's comic opera which follows this article gives an idea of some of the absurdities which grew up in the latter days of the Meistersingers, defeating their original purposes by pedantic restrictions.

Meistersinger von Nürnberg. Richard Wagner's three-act opera to his own book was first performed June 21, 1868, at Munich, von Bülow conducting, and has since been repeatedly performed in all parts of the civilized world. The first act discloses the interior of St. Katherine's church as a service is being concluded. Walther von Stolzing, a young Franconian knight, flirts with Eva, daughter of the rich goldsmith, Veit Pogner, but learns from Magdalene, the Pogners' maid, that the young girl's hand and the goldsmith's wealth are to be the prizes for the song tourney next day. As the last of the congregation depart, David and other apprentices prepare for the session of the Meistersingers, and from David Walther learns something of the regulations of the guild. There are the tones and modes to be learned, the 33 canons to be observed, and when one has acquired the art of singing and composing according to the Tablatur or rules, having been through the degrees of scholar and singer, one must then learn poesy, and on mastering the art of combining poetry with song, progress from poet to Mastersinger. Walther determines to submit to the ordeal. The blackboard is placed in position behind a screen, and in readiness for the Marker, who is to note down any deviations from rule of which the candidate may be guilty, seven such marks sufficing to reject his application. Presently the Mastersingers assemble. Pogner and Beckmesser enter, the latter town clerk, and deeply in love with Eva. Pogner formally announces his intention to bestow Eva upon the victor in next day's contest, provided she does not refuse, and Walther announces himself as candidate for the Mastership. Hans Sachs, cobbler and poet, suggests that the public be allowed to assist in the decision, lest the rules of art become too arbitrary, and annoys Beckmesser, by urging that only young bachelors be permitted to compete, in view of the nature of the prize. Replying to the questions of the Mastersingers, Walther says he has learned poetry from the books of Walther von der Vogelweide, and music of the birds. Only Sachs seems satisfied with the thoroughness of such training. Beckmesser takes his post as Marker, Kothner proclaims the rules to be observed, and Walther is ordered to sing. The scratching of Beckmesser's pencil is heard as Walther utters praise of love and spring. Soon the blackboard is covered with indications of the singer's faults, Beckmesser and the other Mastersingers ridicule the presumptuous knight, but Sachs defends both song and singer, and Walther is permitted to give a second stanza. Then the candidate is voted "outsung and outcast," despite Sachs's protest, and the Mastersingers disperse. The second act shows a street scene. On the right is Pogner's house, to the left the cobbler's shop of Hans Sachs, who is working away, even after the apprentices have put up the shutters for the night. Walther and Eva plan an elopement, but Sachs prevents this, and later, when Beckmesser comes to serenade the goldsmith's daughter, Sachs acts as marker, noting Beckmesser's mistakes with taps of his hammer, and in this way completing a shoe before the serenade is ended. David, who fancies the serenade intended for Magdalene, his elderly sweetheart, rushes out and beats Beckmesser, a crowd assembles, attracted by the brawl, but Sachs forces Walther and David into his shop, Pogner drags Eva into her home, and when order has been restored, the watchman appears to disperse the crowd. When the curtain rises again, Sachs is reading in his shop. Walther appears, and as he improvises a song, the cobbler notes it down, and suggests such alterations as are necessary. Two stanzas are composed in this way, and Walther retires to his room to think out a third. Beckmesser enters, and finding on the table just such a song as he needs for his own use in the tourney, puts it in his pocket. Sachs, who had stepped out for a moment, returns and is reviled by Beckmesser for having conspired against him. As proof, he flourishes the song, but Sachs tells him he may keep it, and he rushes away in delight to compose a melody for it. Pretending to be in need of the cobbler's services, Eva enters, hoping to see Walther again. While Sachs busies himself with her shoes, Walther, who has at last completed his prize song, sings the final verse. The delighted Sachs declares Walther has created a new art, and as David enters with Magdalene, makes the apprentice a journeyman, and all join in a quintet which is one of the most popular numbers in the opera. The scene shifts to the banks of the Pegnitz, where the guilds of the various crafts come marching in for the song tourney. The Mastersingers assemble, Pogner comes with his lovely daughter, and Sachs steps forward to begin the tourney. The people interrupt by singing one of the cobbler's own songs, but when he tells them the unusual nature of the contest, they wait patiently while Beckmesser attempts the verses obtained from Sachs to the tune he had already used as a serenade. Finally he breaks down, and accuses Sachs of having tricked him. The cobbler replies that the song is a good one, though not his, and Walther sings it. The enthusiasm of the people is hardly greater than that of the Mastersingers, and Pogner unites the lovers. The original cast was: Hans Sachs, Bass; Veit Pogner, Fritz Kothner, Bass; Sixtus Beckmesser, Hölzel, Bass; Walther von Stolzing, Nachbar, Ten.; David, Schlosser, Ten.; Eva, Mallinger, Sop.; Magdalene, Dietz, Sop. The opera is said to have been Wagner's reply to the charges made by his enemies that he could not write melody. However that may be, the satire presents a faithful if exaggerated picture of the foibles of the Meistersingers, and in Hans Sachs introduces at least one historical personage upon the stage. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Das Schöne Fest, Johannis-Tag," Pogner; "So rief der Lenz in den Wald," Walther; Act II: "Jerum, jerum, halla, halla, he!" Sachs; "Den Tag seh' ich erscheinen," Beckmesser; Act III: "Wahn! wahn! Ueberall wahn!" Sachs; "Morgenlich leuchtend in rosigem Schein," Walther's prize song; "Verachtet mir den Meister nicht," Sachs; "Heil Sachs! Hans Sachs!" chorus.

Later she had lessons in piano, harmony, and composition, and played organ in churches. Her father objected to music as a career, however, and not until after her marriage in 1882 to Capt. Charles Armstrong, did she become a professional singer. Her voice ranged from b flat to f", and her rôles included Juliette, Violetta, Rosina, the Queen in "Les Huguenots," Nedda, "Hélène" (Saint-Saëns), Elsa, Michaela. Mme. Melba (the name derived from Melbourne) was long a favorite singer at the Paris Opéra, Covent Garden, London, and in 1908 at the Manhattan Opera House, New York City. B. Mendel (Hermann) wrote lives of Meyerbeer and Nicolai; edited the "Musikalisches Conversations-Lexikon." B. Aug. 6, 1834, Halle; d. Oct. 26, 1876, Berlin.

Mendelssohn (Felix) composed the oratorios "St Paul," "Elijah," symphonies, including the so-called "Scotch," and "Italian," a celebrated concerto for violin, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and other overtures, the exquisite "Songs without Words" for piano; was a virtuoso performer on the organ and piano, one of the foremost representatives of the older school of conducting, and the greatest of the many eminent musicians produced by the Jewish race. The family was descended from Mendel, who was schoolmaster of Dessau. Moses Mendelssohn, son of the schoolmaster, distinguished himself in literature, settling in Berlin, where his "Phædon" was published in 1767. Abraham, second son of Moses, became a prosperous banker in Berlin, and was a man of wide culture, though chiefly known in history as the son of his father and the father of his son. He adopted the Christian faith, and added the name "Bartholdy" to his patronymic, and by inheritance and the rite of baptism the great composer, son of Abraham and his wife, Lea Salomon, became Jakob Ludwig Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy. A singularly beautiful devotion marked the family life of the Mendelssohns. Felix was born in Hamburg, where his father was engaged in business, but the French occupation of that city caused the family to return to Berlin when he was but three years old. The mother discovered that her son had "Bach fugue fingers," and he shared with his elder sister Fanny maternal instruction at the piano, which began with five minute lessons. During a sojourn in Paris, Felix, then seven years of age, and his sister, had lessons of Mme. Bigot, and when the family was again united in Berlin the youngsters studied piano with L. Berger, violin with Henning, and theory with Zelter. At the same time the foundations of a general classical education were laid. At 10 the boy made his first appearance at a public concert, playing the piano part in a trio, and the following year he was entered at the Singakademie as an alto. In that year, 1819, the boy's setting of Psalm xix was performed at the Akademie. At 12 he began that collection of his compositions which eventually reached 44 volumes. These early attempts included chamber music, part-songs, a cantata, a comedy with music (Lustspiel), and the one-act operas "Soldatenliebschaft," "Die beiden Pädagogen," and part of another, "Die wandernden Comödianten." A meeting with von Weber at Berlin and a 16 days' visit to Goethe at Weimar were incidents of 1821. In 1822 he again played in concert, joined his family in a tour of Switzerland, and made a second visit to Weimar. Quartets, songs, a Kyrie for two choirs, and the opera "Die beiden Neffen," or "Der Onkel aus Boston," were composed at this period, and all were performed at the Sunday musical entertainments given by the Mendelssohn family at their home in Berlin. From the first the boy showed remarkable talent for improvising, and it is said that during his first visit to Goethe he extemporized the development of a Bach fugue which the great poet asked to hear. In 1824 Mendelssohn received lessons from Moscheles, scored his first symphony, C minor, Op. 11. In 1825 he visited Paris with his father, was welcomed by the best musicians of the French capital, and on advice of Cherubini, composed a five-part Kyrie with orchestra, which, though the score has disappeared, he considered "the biggest thing he had yet done." Returning by way of Weimar, he played his B minor quartet for Goethe, and dedicated it to him, an honour which the poet returned by addressing some verses to him. The family removed from their house on the Neue Promenade to a more commodious residence, surrounded by spacious grounds and having a large garden house on the site now occupied by the Herrenhaus. There Mendelssohn reached manhood in music with his Octet for strings, Op. 18, and there, in the garden house, his Midsummer Night's Dream overture had its first performance, the composer conducting, in 1827. The opera "Camacho" had been submitted to Spontini the previous year, and it likewise was performed in 1827, but was withdrawn after the first performance, having been cheered by his friends but vigorously attacked by the critics. Mendelssohn was at this time a student in Berlin University. He made what is said to have been the first metrical translation of Terence into German, and worked hard at the modern languages. That winter a choir of music lovers Mendelssohn organized at his home began to practice Bach's Passion according to St. Matthew. Its performance in 1828 aroused general interest and led to the formation of the Bach Gesellschaft. In 1829 Mendelssohn was authorized to conduct a performance of this Passion at the Singakademie. This extended his reputation throughout Europe, but aroused the ill-will of the Berlin musicians, the Royal orchestra thereafter declining to play under his baton. The composer, then in his 20th year, determined to visit England. On May 25, he conducted his C minor symphony at the concert of the London Philharmonic Society, where his reception was most cordial. Two other concerts at which he played piano confirmed him in that popularity with the English public which proved a life long asset, and he was elected an honorary member of the Philharmonic Society. It was during this sojourn in London that he declined the task of writing a hymn to celebrate "the emancipation of the natives of Ceylon," although he humorously described himself as "composer to the Island of Ceylon" in letters to his family. A tour of Scotland inspired the "Hebrides" overture, afterwards played with great success in London, as well as the "Scotch" symphony, and he was also engaged in working out his "Reformation" symphony for the tercentenary celebration of the Augsburg Confession of Faith, an operetta for the silver wedding of his parents, and his Scotch sonata for piano (the F sharp minor Fantasia, Op. 28). Returning home, he was offered the chair of music at Berlin University, a post created in his honour, but declined it in favor of Marx, and in the spring of 1830 set out for a long anticipated tour of Italy, accompanied by his younger sister Rebecca. On his way he stopped at Weimar, where he was closely associated with Goethe for two weeks, at Vienna, where he found to his disgust that Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven were being forgotten; at Presburg, where he attended the coronation of the King of Hungary, and on Oct. 9 arrived at Venice. A delightful account of his wanderings through Italy, including brief sojourns in Bologna, Florence, Rome and Naples, will be found in his "Letters from Italy." Returning north by way of Switzerland, he reached Munich in the fall of 1831, played in a concert devoted to his own compositions, and then travelled to Paris, where he was welcomed at the best concerts, both as composer and pianist. Tiring of the French capital, he again visited London, played in several concerts, had the satisfaction of hearing his larger works at others, and issued the first book of his "Songs without Words" (Lieder Ohne Worte), which had a greater vogue than anything published in England since the death of Handel. Returning to Berlin, he was proposed as a candidate for the directorship of the Singakademie in succession to Zelter. Racial antipathy, his early unpopularity with the rank and file of the musicians, and the unwise interference of friends brought about his defeat. He gave three successful public concerts in Berlin, however, began the "Italian" symphony commissioned by the London Philharmonic Society, and was cheered by an invitation to conduct the Lower Rhine Festival at Düsseldorf, 1833. Another visit to London, attended by his usual success as a pianist and the performance of his new symphony, was followed by the festival at Düsseldorf, where his work was so much appreciated that he was engaged as general director of the town at about $450 per annum (600 thalers), an appointment which paved the way for his post at Leipzig as conductor at the GEWANDHAUS, 1835. In Leipzig, with Ferdinand David as concertmeister, Mendelssohn speedily built up the foremost orchestra in Europe. The University of Leipzig gave the degree Dr. Phil., and in 1837 he was asked to conduct the Birmingham Festival. Meantime a professional visit to Frankfort had brought about a meeting with Cecile Charlotte Sophie Jeanrenaud, daughter of a French clergyman, and on Mar. 28, 1837, she became his wife. His best oratorio "St Paul" (Paulus), which he had conducted at the Lower Rhine Festival of the previous year, was given in London in 1837, and later, under his own baton at the Birmingham Festival with great success. Then he hurried back to Leipzig for the beginning of the concert season, devoting himself almost wholly to his duties there for the next few years, although he conducted the festival at Cologne and made short visits to Berlin, Düsseldorf and Frankfort. In 1840 he was instrumental in founding the LEIPSIK CONSERVATORY as well as in erecting a monument to Johann Sebastian Bach in front of the THOMASSCHULE. In 1841 Frederick William IV invited him to return to Berlin as director of the musical section of a proposed Academy of Fine Arts, an offer which Mendelssohn accepted. On his departure, the King of Saxony made him his chapelmaster. A few months later he received the same title from the King of Prussia, and the following summer received the Prussian Ordre pour Merite. The success with which his music to the Greek play "Antigone" was received, a number of excellent concerts, a triumphal engagement in London, and a sixth invitation to conduct the Lower Rhine Festival, failed to restore Mendelssohn's popularity in Berlin. The Academy project proved a failure so far as Mendelssohn and music were concerned, and he asked permission to leave Berlin. The King, however, induced him to accept an appointment as General Music Director of the Domchor. Returning to Leipzig, Mendelssohn established the Conservatory on a secure basis, began his incidental music for "Athalie," "The Tempest," and "Midsummer Night's Dream," and gave the finishing touches to his "Walpurgisnacht." In 1843 he produced Gade's C minor symphony at the Gewandhaus, enabled Berlioz to obtain a hearing there, and then returned to his duties at Berlin, leaving Hiller to conduct at the Gewandhaus. In 1844 he accepted an invitation to conduct five concerts for the London Philharmonic Society, but declined an invitation to conduct a New York music festival. Conditions in Berlin becoming more and more irksome, Mendelssohn withdrew from his official position there, and the following year returned to his old desk at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig. He induced Moscheles to join him at the Conservatory, and besides the routine of concerts and teaching, worked at the oratorio "Elijah," taking time, however, to fill a seventh engagement as conductor at the Lower Rhine Festival. "Elijah" was performed Aug. 26, 1846, at the Birmingham Festival, where the composer said it was "admirably performed and received by both musicians and public with more enthusiasm than had ever been shown one of his works." In 1847 he continued his labours at Leipsic, began the composition of the oratorio "Christus," and made his tenth and last visit to London, this time again to conduct performances of "Elijah." Fanny Mendelssohn, who had married Hensel the painter, died in Berlin, May 14. The news was received by Mendelssohn while in Frankfort, on his way home from London, and the shock caused him to faint away. The death of his father and mother some years before had been severe blows, but in his enfeebled condition, the result of excessive toil, the loss of his favorite sister proved the beginning of the end. He did not cease to compose, and the string quartet in F minor, Op. 80, proves that his cunning was unimpaired, while reflecting his grief. But his spirit was broken. Again in Leipsic, surrounded by his family and friends, he felt unable to conduct, and fell into a decline from which he never rallied. B. Feb. 3, 1809, Hamburg; d. Leipsic, Nov. 4, 1847. See his letters, Eng. trans.; biographies by Lampadius, Benedict, Devrient and Hiller, all in Eng. trans. as well as Carl Mendelssohn-Bartholdy's "Goethe und Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy." Mendelssohn Glee Club was founded during the season of 1865-66 in New York City, formally organized May 21, 1867, and incorporated Oct. 21, 1876, for the cultivation of music and social enjoyment, and has made a specialty of unaccompanied part-songs. The trustees named in the articles of incorporation were: Townsend Cox, Thomas E. Hardenbergh, Charles H. Scott, Horace Howland, and Frederick Wiebusch. The membership consisted of Active, Associate, and Retired members. The first class, composed for the most part of amateur musicians, took part in the concerts and controlled the business of the club. Additional classes of life and honorary members were of later creation. Active members were chosen after an examination in music. They might become associate members after five years' service as singers, or retired, after having sung ten or more years. The club occupied a well appointed house in 40th street, and a hall which in 1909 and for many years previous was the scene of the principal recitals and chamber concerts of the metropolis. The first musical directors were Messrs. Schrimpf and Albites. In 1867 Joseph MOSENTHAL was elected to that office and served until 1896, when he died suddenly in the clubhouse. Born in Cassel, he had been a violin pupil of Spohr, and later became a church musician. Arthur Woodruff, an active member, served as conductor for the remainder of the season, and the late EDWARD A. MACDOWELL was his successor. Mr. MacDowell composed some of his best songs for this organization. On his retirement, May, 1898, ARTHUR MEES became conductor, retiring in 1904 in favor of FRANK DAMROSCH, who was conductor in 1908. Mosenthal, R. L. Herman, and W. W. Gilchrist are among the composers who have written for this club. In August, 1909, Clarence Dickinson, then of Chicago, was chosen conductor.

Mendelssohn Scholarship was instituted as a memorial to Felix Mendelssohn by a committee headed by Sir George Smart shortly after the composer's death. Funds were raised by concerts and donations, and in 1856 Arthur Sullivan was elected to the scholarship, which, during four years, enabled him to study at the Royal Academy of Music, London, and the Leipzig Conservatory. The stipend in 1908 amounted to $500 per annum. F. Corder, Maude Valerie White, Eugene d'Albert were among the most prominent of later scholars.

Merlin. Carl Goldmark's three-act opera, to book by Lippiner, was first performed Nov. 19, 1886, at the Vienna Hof Oper. The following year it was produced in America under the direction of Walter Damrosch. Attacked by the Saxons, King Arthur sends his trusted knight Lancelot to ask aid of Merlin. The great enchanter, son of the Prince of Hell, and a virgin whose spirit protects him against such infernal paternity, compels a demon to blind the Saxon host, thus giving Arthur the victory. The demon learns from the fairy Morgana that if Merlin falls in love with a mortal he will lose his power, so he sends the beautiful Vivien to tempt him. Love so far blinds the wizard that he fails to anticipate the rebellion of Prince Modred against Arthur. Vivien by means of an enchanted veil leaves Merlin bound to the rocks in what had been a moment before a charming garden. There Lancelot, again come to ask his help, finds him. Touched with pity for Arthur, Merlin agrees that if the demon will permit him to win another victory for the stainless king, he will resist the powers of hell no longer. Meantime Vivien has learned from Morgana that the sacrifice of pure love may yet redeem Merlin, and when the enchanter returns victorious but mortally wounded, and the demon comes to claim his own, Vivien kills herself. As the baffled demon disappears, Arthur and his knights mourn their dying friend.

Merry Wives of Windsor. Otto

Nicolai's three-act opera, to book by Mosenthal, based on Shakespeare's comedy, is known in the German version as "Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor." It was first performed Mar. 9, 1849, in Berlin, and later in Italian, French, and English versions. The overture is still a favourite concert number. The adventures of FALSTAFF have likewise been given operatic settings by Balfe and Verdi.

He was "Artistic Director" at Covent Garden

from 1901. A pupil first at the École Niedermeyer, then of Saint-Saëns, Messenger won the gold medal of the Société des Compositeurs, 1876, with a symphony, and the second prize of the City of Paris contest with his cantata for chorus and orchestra "Prométhée enchaîné." For a time he was organist at the Church of St. Sulpice, then conductor in Brussels, and again organist of Paris churches, but in 1883 he began his career as a dramatic composer by completing Firmin Bernicat's comic opera "François les Bas-Bleus." His first original three-act opera, "La Fauvette du Temple" was well received in 1885 at the Folies Dramatiques. "La Bernaise," at the Bouffes Parisiennes in December of the same year proved an immediate success, and enjoyed a long run in London in an English version. Messiah. George Frederick Handel's oratorio, to book by Charles Jennens, selected from the Bible, was begun Aug. 22, 1741, and completed in 24 days. The first performance took place April 13, 1742, in Dublin, for the benefit of the Society for relieving Prisoners, The Charitable Infirmary, and Mercer's Hospital. Much of the work was rewritten before its first publication, 1767. Mozart prepared additional accompaniments for the score, and in 1885 still further additions to the score by Robert Franz were heard in the performance at the Birmingham Festival. The celebrated "Hallelujah

Chorus" has caused two others of the same title by Handel to be forgotten, the "Glory to God," the "Amen," and other numbers have been made familiar in English-speaking countries by more frequent performances of this oratorio than of any other work of its class, and to the tremendous and lasting success of the Messiah the poverty of English dramatic music may be partly attributed.

Messidor. Alfred Bruneau's four-act lyric drama, to book by Emile Zola, was first performed Feb. 19, 1897, at the Paris Opéra.

Mesto. It. Melancholy.

Mestoso. It. Sad.

Measure. Fr. Measure, time.

Metallo. It. "Metal," as "bel metallo di voce"; ringing quality of voice.

Metamorphosis. Variation of a theme or subject, leit motif or idée fixé.

Metastasio (Pietro Antonio Domenico Bonaventura) wrote libretti used by Porpora, Jommelli, Hasse, Piccinni, Gluck, Mozart, and Meyerbeer and many other composers, his "Didone abbandonata" alone having served nearly 40 composers, beginning with Sarri, 1724, and ending with Reissiger, 1823. Mozart's "Clemenza di Tito," to the libretto which six other composers had already set, is the only book of this famous poet still heard on the operatic stage, but "Siface," "Siroe," "Catone in Utica," "Ezio," "Semiramide," "Alessandro nell' Indie," "Artaserse," "Demetrio," "Adriano in Siria," "Issipile," "Olimpiade," "Demofonte," "Achille in Sciro," "Ciro riconosciuto," "Temistocle," "Zenobia," "Antigono," "Ipermestra," "Attilio Regolo," "Il Re Pastore," "L'Eroe Cinese," "L'isola disabitata," "Nitteti," "Alcide al Bivio," "Il Trionfo di Clelia," "Tetide," "Egeria," "Romolo ed Ersilia," "Il Parnasso confuso," "Il Trionfo d'amore," "Partenope," and "Il Ruggiero" were all admired for their poetic qualities and set by famous musicians. Son of a soldier named Trapassi, the name Metastasio was adopted to please his patron Gravina, for whom he translated the Iliad into Italian verse. In 1730 Metastasio became poet laureate to Emperor Charles VI, and thenceforth dwelt in Vienna. Besides his occasional poems and dramatic works, he wrote cantatas, scenas, oratorios, songs, and sonnets, and played harpsichord and composed. B. Jan. 3, 1698, Rome; d. April 12, 1782, Vienna.

B. Stadt Ilm, Thuringia, Oct. 6, 1785; d. Mar. 23, 1869.

Méthode. Fr. "Method"; instruction book; style of teaching.

Metre. Between the syllables and feet of poetry and the beats and bars of music a certain resemblance may be found, and it is possible to express the rhythm of poetry in musical notation, and to suggest musical rhythm by means of the conventional signs for long, short, and common syllables. But in poetry metre depends upon quantity alone, and in music upon emphasis or stress, and hence the nomenclature based upon the length of syllables in classic verse has little value in music, despite the fact that it is occasionally used. The modern tendency in poetry and music alike has been to throw off the shackles and to invent new forms both of metre and of rhythm. Various combinations of syllables and feet are, however, described under their proper heads.

Metrometer. METRONOME.

Metronome. An instrument which enables the composer to indicate the speed at which his works should be performed. It consists of a pendulum kept in motion by clockwork, and having a movable slide by which the number of vibrations per minute may be governed. Thus, when the slide is moved to 60, the pendulum beats 60 times per minute, and when the slide is at 100, the pendulum beats 100 times per minute. The abbreviation M. M. followed by a musical note and a number indicates that with the slider at the number given the note has the value of a single beat. The instrument takes its name from MAELZEL, who was first to manufacture it. Winkel of Amsterdam was the inventor. As now perfected, the instrument has a bell attachment which rings the beats of the bar when that is desired.

Metropolitan Opera House, New York, was opened Oct. 22, 1883, under the management of HENRY E. ABBEY, who had MAURICE GRAU associated with him, in opposition to the lyric productions at the ACADEMY OF MUSIC. After an operatic war lasting two seasons, the Metropolitan remained alone in the field, and was thereafter without opposition in the production of polyglot opera in America until the opening of the MANHATTAN OPERA HOUSE. The building occupies the entire block bounded by Broadway, 7th avenue, 39th and 40th streets, possesses one of the largest stages in America, which was thoroughly modernized by Conried, and has seats for 3700. It was built and owned by a corporation of wealthy men called the Metropolitan Opera House Real Estate Company, who retained for themselves the first tier of boxes (popularly called "the diamond horseshoe"), and leased the management to an impresario. On the financial failure of the Abbey management, DR. LEOPOLD DAMROSCH was placed in charge, and from Italian opera a preference was thereafter shown for German works, especially those of Wagner. In 1891 the house passed into the management of Abbey, Schoeffel, and Grau, and on their failure was taken over by MAURICE GRAU, who was the first to make opera a source of profit in America. On Grau's retirement, HEINRICH VON CONRIED became impresario, 1903, retiring in 1908 in favour of Messrs. GATTI-CASAZZA and DIPPEL, who planned many improvements for the following season. As noted elsewhere, the first opera house in New York was that of Palma, earlier musical performances having taken place at the Park Theatre or at Castle Garden, now the Aquarium. Palma's gave way in turn to the Astor Place Opera House, opened 1847, which in turn was replaced by the Academy of Music.

Metzler (Valentine) founded the London house for manufacturing and selling instruments and publishing music known as Metzler & Co., 1790, B. Bingen-on-Rhine; d. about 1840, London. George Richard and George Thomas, son and grandson of Valentine, continued the business until 1879, when it passed into the hands of Frank Chappell. Trustees of Chappell's estate converted the control into a corporation in 1893.

Metzilloth. Heb. Cymbals. The word also occurs as Metzillthaim and Tzeitzelim.

Mexican National Hymn. Other-wise "El Himno Nacional," was first publicly performed in the City of Mexico, Sept. 11, 1854, in connection with the Independence Day celebration. In December, 1853, General Santa Anna, then President of the Republic, issued a decree offering a prize for a "truly patriotic" poem to be approved by the Federal Government. 26 poems were submitted in competition, and that of Don Francisco Gonzalez y Bocanegra, consisting of ten verses of eight lines each and a chorus, received the award. Feb. 5, 1854, a decree was issued announcing a competition for the best setting of Bocanegra's hymn. 16 compositions were submitted, the prize being awarded that of Don Jaime NUNO, a Spanish music master settled in Mexico.

Mexico, City of, was the seat of the Mexican National Conservatory, which taught music in all branches, and provided an excellent series of concerts, lately directed by Ricardo CASTRO. Military bands of the republic have acquired an international reputation, and the Conservatory has been the training school of a majority of the bandmasters. The Opera has been a notable feature of the season in the Mexican capital for three generations, and in its expenditures in support of music the city in 1908 ranked with Buenos Ayres and Rio de Janeiro.

Meyer (Gregor) composed church music in polyphonic style highly commended by Glareanus; played organ at Solothurn Cathedral, 16th century.

Meyer (Gustav) composed ballets, farces; conducted Leipsic Theatre, 1895; pupil Leipsic Conservatory. B. June 14, 1859; add. Leipsic.

Meyer-Helmund (Erik) composed popular songs, the operas "Margitta," "Der Liebeskampf," the ballets "Rübezahl," and the burlesque "Trischla"; sang in concerts; pupil of Kiel and Stockhausen. B. April 25, 1861, St. Petersburg; add. St. Petersburg.

Meyerbeer (Giacomo) composed the highly successful operas, "ROBERT LE DIABLE," "Les HUGUENOTS," "Le PROPHÈTE," "DINORAH," "L'AFRICAIN," "united to the flowing melody of the Italians and the solid harmony of the Germans the pathetic declamation and the varied piquant rhythm of the French," as his biographer Mendel expressed it. Originally known as Jakob Liebmann Beer, and son of the wealthy banker, Herz Beer, he assumed the name Meyer in compliment to a rich relative whose heir he became. In childhood a pupil of Lauska and later of Clementi, he played the Mozart D minor concerto in public at the age of seven, and was classed among the best of Berlin pianists at nine. Then he studied with Zelter and B. A. Weber, by whose means he became known to Abbé Vogler, with whom he lived at Darmstadt for two years in the most intimate relations, sharing the lessons of C. M. von Weber, gaining in power as a pianist, and composing his four-part "Sacred Songs of Klopstock," the oratorio "God and Nature," his first opera "Jephthah's Vow," and receiving an appointment as court composer to the Grand Duke. His opera, produced in 1813, failed in Munich, but "Alimelek," produced the same year at Stuttgart was so well received that the manager of the Vienna Kärnthnertheater undertook to give it. Meyerbeer visited the Austrian capital to assist at rehearsals. Though the opera was soon withdrawn, the young composer was favourably received as a pianist. Moscheles declared few virtuosi could rival him if he chose to make a specialty of his instrument. Acting on the advice of Salieri, Meyerbeer preferred to visit Italy in order to learn how to write for the voice. "Romilda e Costanza," Padua, 1818; "Semi-ramide riconosciuta," Turin, 1819; "Eduardo e Cristina" and "Emma di Resburgo," Venice, 1820, proved with what facility he could adapt himself to Italian taste and temperament, for they were well received, despite the overwhelming popularity of Rossini. "Margherita d'Anjou," "L'Esule di Granata," and "Crocioato" complete the works of this period. He began an opera "Almansor," but it was never finished. "Das Brandenburger Thor," a three-act German work, was offered the Berlin Opera in 1823, but did not receive a hearing. Von Weber, however, had produced his "Alimelek or The Two Califfs" at Prague, and later at Dresden, and he urged his old fellow student to devote himself to German music, and Meyerbeer seems to have promised. The success of "Crocioato" resulted in a Paris production in 1826, and Meyerbeer was thereafter French in sympathy and spirit. He went to Berlin to settle his father's estate, then devoted his leisure to the study of the French classics, and returning to Paris in 1831, took with him the score of "Robert." It is said that he had to fee Veron liberally to have this opera produced, but it proved the greatest financial success of the decade. His next work, "The Huguenots," has enjoyed a still more lasting popularity. Recalled to Berlin as General Music Director to Friedrich Wilhelm IV, Meyerbeer there produced "Das Feldlager in Schlesien," the charm of Jenny Lind's voice establishing it in favour. While holding his post at Berlin Meyerbeer produced the "Euryanthe" of his friend von Weber, then deceased, and gave a careful production of "Rienzi," a favour which Wagner returned by denouncing him as a "Jew banker to whom it occurred to compose operas"—not, however, until he had prevailed on Meyerbeer to also produce the "Flying Dutchman." In 1849 Meyerbeer returned to Paris for the performance of his "Prophet," and subsequently began the composition of "L'Etoile du Nord," which was given in 1854 at the Opéra Comique. "Dinorah" was produced at the same house in 1859. "L'Africaine," which the composer had begun in 1838, had occasioned many altercations with Scribe, the librettist. Meyerbeer exchanged this libretto for the book of "Le Prophète," but again took it up in 1863. Though rehearsed by Meyerbeer, this opera was not performed until after his death, which occurred at Paris following his return from England, where he had represented German music at the London Exhibition with his "Overture in the form of a March." Other works in addition to the operas named were incidental music to the tragedy "Struensee," written by his brother Michael; choruses for the "Eumenides" of Aeschylus, the festival play "Die Hoffest von Ferrara"; "Le Génie de Musique à la Tombe de Beethoven," for soli and chorus; the cantata "Maria und ihr Genius," soli and chorus (for the silver wedding of Prince and Princess Charles of Prussia), the eight-part serenade "Braut-geleite aus der Heimath"; Ode to Rauch the sculptor, soli, chorus, and orchestra; Festival Hymn for the silver wedding of the King of Prussia, soli and chorus; cantata for the unveiling of Gutenberg's statue at Mainz, four voices; "March of the Bavarian Archers," cantata for four voices and male chorus with brass instruments in accompaniment; "Freundschaft," male quartet; Coronation March, 1863; Grand March for the Schiller Festival of 1859; songs, church music, including Psalm xc, a Stabat Mater, Miserere, Te Deum. Mignon. Ambroise Thomas's three-act opera, to book by Carré and Barbier, was first performed Nov. 17,

1866, at the Paris Opéra Comique. It is based on Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister." "Mignon," a child of noble birth stolen by the Gypsies, is ordered to perform the egg dance in the court of a German inn. Worn out with her journey, she refuses. Giarno, leader of the Gypsies, is about to beat her, when Lotario, harper to a band of strolling players, interferes. The Gypsy then turns on him, but Wilhelm Meister ("Guglielmo"), who has joined the players because of his love for Filina, their leading lady, interferes, rescuing both the old man and the child. To save Mignon from further persecution, Filina gives money to the Gypsies, and Mignon, dressed as a page, becomes Wilhelm's attendant. The child loves Wilhelm, who is engrossed by Filina. Jealous of the actress, Mignon determines to throw herself in the lake near a castle at which the players are received, but the sweet tones of Lotario's harp appeal to her better nature. She tells her grief to Lotario, and expresses the wish that the castle in which the beautiful actress is playing may be struck by lightning. At last the play is over. Filina, coming from the castle, sends Mignon back for some flowers which she has forgotten. But Lotario, half mad with his own grief, has fired the castle, and as the flames burst out, Wilhelm rushes into the burning building and rescues her. The last act opens in Lotario's house in Italy, whither Mignon has been taken to recover from the illness attendant upon the shock. In her delirium she reveals her love for Wilhelm. Then it is discovered that Mignon is really Sperata, the long lost daughter of Lotario, Marquis of Cypriani, who became a harper in order that he might search for her. Filina renounces Wilhelm in favour of Frederick, another lover, and Wilhelm and Mignon are united. The original cast included: Mignon, Galli-Marie, mez. sop.; Wilhelm, Achard, ten.; Læertes, Conders, bar.; Lotario, Bataille, bass; Filina, Cabel, sop. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Non

Mikado. Sir Arthur Sullivan's comic opera, to book by W. S. Gilbert, was first performed Mar. 14, 1885, at the London Savoy Theatre, and speedily became popular throughout the English-speaking world. The music is charming, the book capital fun, but although the piece is Japanese in name only, its performance was forbidden by the Censor in 1907 in Great Britain, on the ground that it might wound the sensibilities of the Japanese people.

Milan has been one of the chief centres of Italian music since the 16th century. In April, 1908, the 100th anniversary of the establishment of the great conservatory now called the "Real Conservatorio di Musica Giuseppe Verdi Milano" was celebrated by a great music festival in which the friends and alumni of the institution were welcomed from all parts of the world. The management of the celebrated opera house "Teatro alla SCALA," of the Società de Quartetto, the Società dei Concerti Sinfonici, the Società di Amici della Musica, contributed to the success of this notable occasion by an appropriate series of representations, a feature of which was the performance of a theme with variations for orchestra, and a four-part Psalm à capella for which Sonzogno awarded prizes of 3000 and 2000 lire. The committee in charge consisted of Arrigo Boito, Giuseppe Gallignani, Umberto Giordano, Giacomo Orefice, Giacomo Puccini, Giulio Ricordi, Edoardo Sonzogno, Arturo Toscanini. Napoleon ordered the establishment of the Conservatory in 1807, but it was not until the following year that the viceroy, Eugene Beauharnais, found a home for it in the old convent attached to the Church of Santa Maria della Passione. The regulations were drawn up by Gian Simone Mayr, and the first president was Bonifazio Asioli, the faculty consisting of Federigi, Secchi, Ray, Piantanida, Negri, Rolla, Sturioni, Andrei, Adami, Belloli, Buccinelli. During the occupation of Milan by the Austrians, 1848-49, troops were quartered in the Conservatory buildings, but the professors gave lessons at their homes, preserving the continuity of instruction. The following year, when the Conservatory reopened, the courses were enlarged by President Lauro Rossi. Since that time the Conservatory has given complete musical and literary education. In 1908 the faculty consisted of Giuseppe Galignani, president; Vincenzo Ferroni, Gatano Coronado, composition; Michele Saladino, Luigi Mapelli, counterpoint and fugue; Amintore Galli, Carlo Gatti, harmony; Alberto Leoni, Vincenzo Pintorno, Paolina Vaineri Filippi, singing; Vincenzo Appiani, Giuseppe Frugatta, piano; Luigi Maurizio Tedeschi, harp; Luigi Mapelli, organ; Gerolamo De Angelis, Marco Anzoletti, Enrico Polo, violin and viola; Giuseppe Magarini, cello; Italo Caimmi, doublebass, Antonio Zamperoni, flute, Alfredo Carlotti, oboe; Romeo Orsi, clarinet; Antonio Torriani, bassoon; Carlo Fontana, horn; Serse Peretti, trumpet and trombone; Ettore Pozzoli, theory and solfeggio; Guglielmo Andreoli, assistant, piano; Paolo Maggi, assistant, harmony; Amintore Galli, history and liturgy; Lodovico Corio, poetic and dramatic literature; Ginevra Povoni, declamation and dramatic art; Eugenio De' Guarinoni, secretary of the faculty.

Mock Doctor. English title of Charles F. Gounod's "MÉDECIN MALGRÉ LUI."

Mode. In modern music all scales are either in the MAJOR or MINOR mode. The genesis of the scale or mode and the genera by which an even greater variety of material was afforded for the construction of melody than now exists have already been explained under the head of GREEK MUSIC. The Latin people having always borrowed from the Greeks in the matter of art, it was natural for the church musicians of the early centuries of the Christian era to adapt as far as they were able the Greek theories and nomenclature of music to that used in worship. Tradition has it that St. Ambrose employed four Modes, and that St. Gregory added four Plagal to these Authentic Modes, and it is at least certain there are eight Gregorian Tones corresponding to eight Modes. These Modes differed not in tonality, for the compass of each is to be found on the white keys of the piano, but in pitch. The introduction of a chromatic in the cantus firmus or melody was alike forbidden by church law and by taste. Later the use of B flat was allowed when necessary to avoid a TRITONE, and with the growth of polyphonic music chromatics were introduced in other parts than the cantus firmus, in performance, but not in notation, a practice which gave rise to the term MUSICA FICTA. The eight Modes which served from the time of Gregory were ascending scales, and were distinguished at first by the Dominant, which served as the reciting note in most of the PLAIN-SONG melodies, and more especially in later ages by the Final, which corresponded in importance with the modern Tonic or Key Note. In an Authentic Mode, the lowest note was the Final. In the corresponding Plagal Mode, the same note served as a Final, although the compass extended a fourth lower. Where a melody required the compass of both an Authentic Mode and its Plagal, it was said to be in a Mixed Mode. Greek names were at first given the Modes, which afterwards came to be designated by number, and at the time of their chief importance, the Modes had the following names and compasses, the Dominant and Final of each being enclosed in brackets: First Authentic or Dorian, D to d (a D); Second Plagal or Hypodorian, A to a (F D); Third Authentic or Phrygian, E to e (b E); Fourth Plagal or Hypophrygian, B to b (a E); Fifth Authentic or Lydian, F to f (c F); Sixth Plagal or Hypolydian, C to c (a F); Seventh Authentic or Mixolydian, G to g (d G); Eighth Plagal or Hypomixolydian, D to d (c G). In the period of transition between the Modal and Tonal systems attempts were made to increase the number of the Modes to 12 and even 14, but these only added to the confusion of the theorists.

Of noble birth, Monsigny obtained a government clerkship in 1749, which gave him leisure to devote to music, developed much skill as a violinist, prosecuted his studies while a member of the household of the Duke of Orleans, and produced "Les Aveux indiscrets," his first operatic work, after only five months' study of composition. Monteverde (Claudio) invented the harmonic style of composition still in vogue, to the utter destruction of the polyphonic system, which had reached its culmination in Palestrina, and from 1584, when his first book of "Canzonette a tre voci" appeared in Venice, exemplified the unprepared entrance of dissonances such as the dominant seventh and ninth, and with tongue and pen defended the harmonic system against the bitter attacks of the contrapuntists. Monteverde, or as he sometimes signed himself, Monteverdi, entered the service of the Duke of Mantua in boyhood as a violinist. His talent attracted general attention, and the first publication referred to was issued when he was but sixteen. Possibly, although he was a pupil of Ingegneri, the Ducal chapelmaster, the violation of counterpoint in this and in subsequent early books of madrigals may have been owing to ignorance. The "Cruda Amarilli" of his Fifth Book of Madrigals, 1605, was the beginning of the revolution in art. Artusi of Bologna published a severe attack on the young composer under the title "Delle imperfettione della moderna musica," to which Monteverde replied by a letter prefixed to his next work, addressed "Agli studiosi lettori," and disputes among the musicians became so bitter that Monteverde visited Pope Clement VIII to enlist the sympathy of the church in his new style. In 1602 he became chapelmaster at Mantua, and five years later, on the occasion of the marriage of the duke's son, produced his opera "Orfeo," which was orchestrated for 36 instruments, and is said to have embodied what are still regarded as "new conceptions" in opera. "Arianna," a serious opera which had a great success, but which is no longer extant, and "Il ballo delle ingrate," a mythological spectacle, were the remaining works of the composer during his residence in Mantua, which he quitted, 1613, to become chapelmaster at St. Mark's, Venice. There he received a salary of 300 ducats, the use of a house, an allowance for his expenses in moving, and in 1616 had his salary increased to 500 ducats, or more than twice as much as any of his predecessors had received. Notwithstanding the enmity of the theorists, he was soon the most popular composer in Europe. Among the works which spread his fame abroad were a Requiem for Duke Cosmo II of Florence, "Il Combattimento di Tancredi e Florinda," a dramatic interlude, "Licori, la finta pazza," for the court of Parma; the cantata "Il Rosajo fiorito," the opera "Proserpina rapita," and a mass with trombone accompaniment to the Gloria and Credo, in thanksgiving for the cessation of a plague which had ravaged Venice. In 1633 Monteverde was admitted to the priesthood, and was not again heard of as a composer until 1637, when the first opera house was opened in Venice. "L'Adone" was written for this occasion, and later he composed the operas "Le Nozze di Enea con Lavinia," "L'Incoronazione di Poppea" (his last work), and the ballet "Vittoria d'Amore." Three volumes of church music, eight books of madrigals, a set of scherzi musicali, the volume of canzonettes of 1584, and "Orfeo" survive in printed form. B. May, 1567, Cremona; d. Nov. 29, 1643, Venice.

for Violin, Augsburg, 1756, reprinted in many languages; composed the operas "Semiramis," "Die Verstellte Gärtnerin," oratorios, church music; was composer, musician, and chapel-master to the Archbishops of Salzburg; married Anna Maria Pertlin or Bertlin, of St. Gilgen, and became the father of MARIA ANNA and WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART. Mozart (Wolfgang Amadeus) composed the operas "NOZZE DI FIGARO," "DON GIOVANNI," "ZAUBERFLÖTE," "COSI FAN TUTTE," "ENTFÜHRUNG AUS DEM SERAIL," "IDOMENEO," which retain their freshness and popularity after more than a century, 15 masses, 41 symphonies, and a wealth of chamber music which rank him as the world's greatest master of melody. Light-hearted, industrious, imaginative, but content to work in the forms already perfected, and composing with a grammarian's strictness, he suffered the extremes of poverty and was buried in the potter's field, his immortal works his best and long his only monument. Profiting by the music lessons given his sister, the boy, whose full name was Johannes Chrys-ostomus Wolfgangus Amadeus, was able to pick out thirds on the harpsichord at the age of three. This led to lessons from his father, and he had composed some minuets, which his father noted down, when not yet four. Before he was six Mozart had appeared in the comedy "Sigismundus Hungariæ Rex," given at Salzburg University, and a few months later his father took him with his sister for a concert tour. The boy was kindly received by the Elector at Munich, and then the family visited Vienna, giving a concert at Linz while on their journey. The Emperor called the lad a little magician, had him play with a cloth thrown over the keyboard, and the Empress and ladies of the court petted both children, but an attack of scarlet fever compelled him to go into seclusion. On his recovery he appeared in concert at Pressburg, returning with his father and sister to their home for the holidays. A second and more extended concert tour began in June, 1763. After concerts in many of the larger German cities, the Mozart family reached Paris in November of that year, and for the next five months were the delight of the court at Versailles. Young Mozart's first publication dates from this sojourn, four sonatas for violin and piano, 6, 7, 8, and 9 (Köchel's Catalogue, see below). In April, 1764, the Mozarts settled for a time in London, where they were received warmly by the court and musicians. The boy distinguished himself by reading difficult works at sight; studied with J. Christian Bach and the singers Tenducci and Manzuoli. A concert in Spring Gardens brought the family $2500, and during an illness of his father's, which necessitated quiet, young Mozart composed his first symphonies, 15, 17, 18, and 19. Six of his early sonatas for violin and harpsichord were published with a dedication to the Queen, who presented the composer with $250. The children played a four-hand piece for harpsichord at concerts given later in the season, and during a visit to the British Museum young Mozart presented to the institution his only vocal number to English words, a 4-part motet. The family then departed for The Hague, but owing to illness, which attacked the boy, girl, and father in turn, were prevented from giving a concert until Jan., 1766. Two successful entertainments at Amsterdam, at one of which the boy's symphony, 22 was performed, were followed by festivities at The Hague for the installation of the Prince of Orange as Stadtholder. The six sonatas for violin and piano, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31, and the "Galimathias Musicum," a concerto grosso, 32, and the harpsichord variations on "Willem van Nassau" were composed in Holland, and then the family set out for Salzburg, giving concerts on the journey, and arriving at their home in Nov., 1766. With the exception of a sudden flight in a vain attempt to escape an epidemic of smallpox (both children were attacked), the next two years were spent at home in study and composition. Fux's "Gradus ad Parnassum" was the text-book for Mozart, as for many other great musicians. His compositions included the sacred cantata "Die Schuldigkeit des ersten Gebotes," done as a test imposed by the Archbishop of Salzburg, a Passions cantata, 42, the piano concertos 37, 39, 40, 41, and the Latin comedy, "Apollo et Hyacinthus." The Mozarts then visited Vienna. The young composer's first opera, "La finta Semplice," was composed by order of the Emperor, though not performed until the operetta "Bastien und Bastienne" had been given at the home of the Mesmer family. The B flat major string quartet, 46, a trumpet concerto, and several church pieces were composed during this visit. On returning to Salzburg he was appointed concertmeister to the Archbishop, though without salary, composed the two masses, 65, 66, and the Johannes Oxfertorium, 72. In 1769 Mozart's father took him on a tour of Italy, where he was heartily welcomed by the musicians, including Padre Martini and Farinelli, and became intimate with the young English musician Thomas Linley. He performed the remarkable feat of noting the Allegri Miserere from memory, after hearing it in the Sistine Chapel, and after having given successful concerts from Milan to Naples, was made Knight of the Golden Spur by the Pope, an extraordinary honour for a boy of 14. The Bologna Accademia Filarmonica broke its rules to honour him with membership, and during the same year he received some instruction in counterpoint from Padre Martini. "Mitridate, Rè di Ponto," Milan, Dec. 26, conducted by the composer, established him as a favourite with Italian lovers of opera, and won him several commissions. During a short sojourn in Salzburg, Mozart composed a Litany, 109, a Regina cœli, 108, and a symphony, 110. Then returning to Milan he composed the cantata "Ascanio in Alba" for the marriage of Archduke Ferdinand to Beatrice of Modena, Milan, Oct. 15, 1771, for which the Empress sent him a gold watch and a liberal fee; the symphony, 112, and the divertimento, 113. Again in Salzburg, Mozart was ordered to compose an opera for the inauguration of von Colloredo, the Archbishop elected on the death of the composer's earlier patron. "Il Sogno di Scipione" was the result, and the symphonies, 114, 124, 128, 129, 130, the divertimento, 131, a Regina cœli, 127, the Litany "de venerabili," 125, and the string quartets, 136, 137, and 138 were composed during the same year. Up to this time Mozart's life had been exceptionally happy. He had worked hard, but though a strict taskmaster, Leopold Mozart had been a kind and indulgent father, and as an "infant phenomenon" in company with his sister, Maria Anna, or "Nannerl," the young musician had been petted by the courts of London, Paris, Vienna. The new Archbishop of Salzburg proved inappreciative of art and brutal to his artists. In contrast to the consideration with which he had been treated elsewhere, Mozart was forced to eat with the servants, and was treated as one, but it was not until 1781 that he mustered up courage to free himself from this disagreeable environment. When he at last presented his resignation, he was literally kicked out of the palace by the Archbishop's steward, Count Arco. These years of servitude, however, were spent in hard study and creative work. "Lucio Silla," produced at Milan, Dec. 26, 1772, under the composer's direction, like the earlier opera composed for that cultivated city, had 20 repetitions. The symphonies, 181, 182, 183, 184; the divertimenti, 186, 187, 188; the mass, 167; the concerto for two violins, 190; the serenata, 185; the Pater Domenicus Mass, 66; the string quartet, 174; the masses, 192, 194; the litany, 195; the offertory, 198; the bassoon concerto, 191; the symphonies, 199, 200, 201, 202; the serenatas, 203, 204; the divertimento, 205; and the variations on Fischer's minuet, 179, were all completed before the close of 1773. The opera "La finta Giardiniera" was produced with success at Munich in 1775, as well as his "Misericordias Domini," 222, composed by order of the Elector. The same year at Salzburg, his mass, 220; the airs for tenor, 209, 210; the air for soprano, 217; the vocal canons, 226 to 234; and the violin concertos, 207, 211, 216, 218, 219, had their first hearing. To the formidable list of works already enumerated, Mozart added during 1777, when in his 21st year, the masses, 257, 258, 259, 262, 275; "Venite populi," an offertory for two choirs, 260; the litany, 243; the serenade, 249-250; a serenade for two violins and accompaniment, 239; the divertimento; the nocturno, 286; the divertimenti for string quartet and two horns, 247, 287; the wind sextets, 240, 252, 253, 270, 289; a sonata for bassoon and cello, 292; the oboe concerto, 293; the variations for piano, 264, 265; and the sonatas, 238 to 246; the concerto for three pianos, 242; and the organ sonatas, 241, 244, 245, 263, 274, 278. Having obtained the reluctant consent of the Archbishop, Mozart, this time accompanied by his mother, set off on a concert tour in the fall of 1777. While at Mannheim he met the Weber family, and fell in love with Aloysia, whose sister afterwards became his wife. There he composed the soprano air, 292, for her; and the tenor air for Raaff, 295; the flute pieces, 313, 314, 315; the quartet for flute and strings, 285; the piano sonatas, 309, 310, 311; and the sonatas for violin and piano, 296, 300 to 306. Arriving in Paris in Mar., 1778, Mozart found the musicians too busily engaged in the rivalry of Gluck and Piccini to pay him much attention. He had the misfortune to lose his mother, July 3, 1778, and after this bereavement his father urged him to return to Salzburg. A concerto for flute and harp, 299, 12 numbers for Noverre's ballet "Les petits riens," and the Paris or French symphony, 297, were the output of this sojourn in the French capital. In 1779 he was home again, organist as well as concertmeister to the Archbishop, but fired with ambition for the stage, brought about by association with Schikaneder. Music for the play "Thamos," and the opera "Zaide," which waited for its performance until 1866 (Frankfort), were the only immediate dramatic works, but in other lines he was more prolific. The masses, 317 ("Coronation"), 337; the Kyrie, 323; the canons, 347, 348; the symphonies, 319, 338; the "Villanella rapita" overture, 318; the duo concertante for viola and violin, 364; the serenades, 320, 361; the piano sonatas, 330 to 333; the divertimento for two horns and string quartet, 334; variations for violin and piano, 359, 360; the four-hand sonatas, 357, 358; the concerto for two pianos, 365; the organ sonatas, 328, 329, 336; the Kyrie, 341; the concert aria, 369; and the quartet for oboe and strings, 370, were completed by 1781. Then Mozart began work on his opera "Idomeneo" for the carnival at Munich. Recalled from Munich, where he had gone with his father and sister to attend the production of this work, Mozart was compelled to attend the Archbishop at Vienna, where, after repeated humiliations, as already related, he left that prelate's service, June 8, 1781. His contest at the piano with CLEMENTI, in which honours appear to have been even, was an event of this period. A friendship with Haydn sprang up which endured with life, and seems to have influenced the work of both composers, and Mozart was at last commissioned by the Emperor to write an opera, the "Entführung aus dem Serail," July 16, 1782, which was a popular success, though not admired by the sovereign himself. From the same period date his symphony in D, 385, and the "Nachtmusik" for wind instruments in C minor, known also as a string quintet, 388. The Webers, with whom Mozart had been intimate in Mannheim, were now settled in Vienna. Mozart lodged at their house, and, despite the opposition of his father, married Constanze Weber, Aug. 4, 1782. Four sons and two daughters were the issue of this marriage. Husband and wife were equally improvident, Mozart's income was uncertain at best, and his life was thenceforth harried by financial troubles. He began, but failed to complete, the comic operas "L'Oca del Cairo" and "Lo Sposo deluso," but while on a visit to Salzburg with his bride, produced a new mass in honour of his marriage, 427, and two duets for violin and viola, 423, 424, for Michael Haydn, whom the Archbishop had threatened to dismiss from his post of concertmeister because he was too ill to work. The piano concerto for Marie T. Paradies, 456, and the symphony, 425, were completed before the composer's return to Vienna, where he shortly afterwards enjoyed a return visit from his father. Leopold Mozart at this time, influenced by his son, already an enthusiastic member, joined the Masonic order. It is interesting to note that besides the symbolism of "Magic Flute," several of Mozart's works show Masonic inspiration: "Gesellenlied," 468; "Maurerfreude," 471; "Maurerische Trauermusik," 471; the choruses, 483, 484; the cantata, 623; the adagio for woodwinds, 411; and the cantata, 429. The cantata "Davidde penitente" was produced in March, 1785, at the Tonkünstler Societät, and the composer again devoted himself to the theatre. "Der Schauspieldirektor," produced before the court, Feb. 7, 1786, was well received later at the Kärnthnertheater, a company of the nobility produced "Idomeneo" at the Auersperg Palace, and May 1, 1786 saw the first production of the ever popular "Nozze di Figaro." While waiting for another suitable libretto, he composed the symphony, 504, the contradanzas for orchestra, 510, and the orchestral dances, 509. "Don Giovanni" was produced with equal success, but Mozart remained without financial reward for these great achievements. At a time when he had almost determined to quit Vienna for London, Gluck died, and the Emperor, who had been paying him 2000 gulden as court composer, appointed Mozart to that office at 800 gulden, or about $400 per annum. "Don Giovanni," which had been hailed in Prague as a masterpiece, did not at first please the Viennese. The E flat, G minor, and C (Jupiter) symphonies, 543, 550, and 551, his best works in this form and his arrangements of Bach and Handel were completed before the spring of 1789, when Mozart left for Berlin as guest of Prince K. Lichnowsky. At Dresden, Leipsic, and Berlin the composer was well received. Frederick Wilhelm II offered him the post of chapelmaster with $3000 per annum salary, and commissioned the string quartets, 575, 589, 590. Loyalty to his "good Emperor" caused the composer to decline this excellent offer. He was rewarded by the commission for "Cosi fan tutte," which was having a run when the death of the Emperor, Feb. 20, 1790, plunged Vienna into mourning. Ignored by the new Emperor Leopold II, Mozart nevertheless pawned his plate to attend the coronation at Frankfort, where he gave a concert of his own works, playing before the courts of Mannheim and Munich on his way back to Vienna. The "Ave Verum," 618, and other works were begun at this time, and in March, 1791, he was requested by Schikaneder to compose the "Magic Flute." He was hard at work on this opera when a mysterious stranger called upon him to engage a requiem. The Estates of Bohemia invited him to compose an opera for the coronation of Leopold II at Prague, and accordingly Mozart produced "La Clemenza di Tito," but the unfavourable reception of his work by the court circles was a grave disappointment, and he hurried back to Vienna to resume work on the "Magic Flute." This work was produced Sept. 30, 1791. The audience, at first cold, grew more appreciative as the work progressed, and eventually it became one of the most popular of Mozart's operas. Ill, depressed, and overworked, Mozart again turned to the requiem. He fancied that he was being poisoned, and that it was really his own requiem he was composing. The score was taken away from him, and he recovered sufficiently to compose a cantata, 623, for his Masonic Lodge, and to conduct it himself, but was again compelled to take to his bed. The requiem, which had really been ordered by Count Walsegg, through Leutgeb, his steward, and which was performed as Walsegg's own, engrossed Mozart's thoughts. He called for the score on Dec. 4, sang part of it with some friends, and scored a few bars of the Lacrimosa. Later he gave his pupil Sussmayer some directions regarding its performance, and about 1 A. M., Dec. 5, he died. During his last illness, which was described as a malignant typhus, a group of Hungarian nobles had organized to guarantee him a fixed income, and in Amsterdam a subscription was formed for the purchase of his compositions, which were to be the property of the subscribers. On Dec. 6 funeral services were held in front of St. Stephen's, that being the custom with the very poor. A violent rainstorm drove back the few mourners who might otherwise have witnessed the interment, which took place in St. Marx Churchyard. Dec. 5, 1869, the municipality of Vienna caused a monument to be unveiled on the probable site of the composer's grave. B. Jan. 27, 1756, Salzburg; d. Dec. 5, 1791,

Practically all the musicians employed in theatres throughout the United States are members of the organization, which has served a useful purpose in maintaining a fair and uniform scale of prices. The union is especially strong in New York City, where its members include the entire personnel of the opera and other orchestras. Inability to agree with the union as to the scale of wages is the reason given for the discontinuance of the CINCINNATI SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA by its management. Numerous attempts have been made to unionize the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, but all have failed. The members of that orchestra are employed under annual contract at terms in excess of that required by the union, and in 1905-6 H. L. Higginson, through whose patronage this orchestra came into being, announced that no members of the orchestra would be permitted to join the union.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale, who was present on that occasion, and knew the author well, is authority for the statement that the verses were written at the request of the pastor of the church, who then handed the author several German and English hymn books, and told him to find some tune to which his verses would fit. "Dr. Smith looked through the books and selected the tune, which he had never heard, and which has been sung in this country as "America" ever since. Naples was for centuries one of the chief music centres of Italy, and, besides the historic SAN CARLO opera house, is the possessor of the Real Conservatorio di Musica, founded in 1808 as the successor of four earlier famous institutions. The first directors were Tritta, Paisiello, and Feneroli, who were succeeded, 1813, by

Zingarelli. Under the administration of this famous maestro a preparatory school was added, the faculty strengthened, and the institution became one of the foremost in Europe. From 1837 to 1840 the management devolved upon Donizetti, who, in 1860, was replaced by Mercadante. Another period of prosperity followed. In 1861 Conti was appointed coadjutor to Mercadante, who had become blind. On Conti's death, 1868, Paolo Serrao Mercadante became president, and after his death, 1870, the management was left in the hands of a council of professors and alumni. An excellent library is attached to the institution. The first Naples Conservatory was that of Santa Maria di Loreto. John Tinctor, a Netherland musician, had conducted a music school in Naples toward the middle of the 15th century, which doubtless served as a model for the artisan Francesco, who, in 1535, began to give instruction to orphan children in his own home. So well did he succeed that Giovanni da Tappia, a Spanish priest, gave nine years of his life to begging from door to door throughout the Neapolitan territories to raise funds for the enlargement of the work, and Francesco's scholars were then installed in a well-appointed building near the church from which the Conservatory took its name. Leo, Cafaro, and Sala were educated there. It will be noted that all four of these music schools were charities, conducted under the watchful eye of the church. The National Conservatory, which was never intended to be a money-making institution, was modelled after the Paris Conservatoire. In 1905 it was removed from 128 East 17th Street to more commodious quarters at 45-49 West 25th Street. The late Antonin Dvořák, one of the leading modern composers, was for three years its director, and the greatest of American pianists, Rafael JOSEFFY, was for 20 years at the head of the piano department. Lillian BLAUVELT was a National Conservatory student; so were the American composers, Harry Rowe Shelley, Rubin Goldmark, and Harvey Worthington Loomis. The Conservatory was chartered by a special Act of the Congress of the United States in 1891. The director in 1908 was Wassily SAFONOFF, who was for a decade at the head of the Moscow Conservatory, and in 1908 also conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. They meet, but their rapturous love scene is interrupted by Remigio, a thrifty peasant, father of Araquil. He declares his son shall not marry Anita unless she can obtain a dowry of 2000 douros. Araquil is promoted lieutenant, but this does not console him. Anita overhears the royalist general, Garrido, offer a fortune to any one who can take or kill Zuccaraga. Anita sees in this her only opportunity of obtaining a dowry, and when Garrido confirms his offer, leaves for the Carlist camp. Meantime Araquil has been vainly seeking the girl. His comrades tell him she has gone to the Carlists, and he rushes out to prove the truth of the rumour. In the second act shots are heard, and Anita returns to camp, claiming her reward from Garrido. A funeral knell confirms her statement that she has killed Zuccaraga. Garrido pays her 2000 douros, and as she is trying to conceal her gold Araquil enters, badly wounded. He tells Anita that he had gone to rescue her from Zuccaraga's arms, and when she shows him the gold, refusing to tell him where she got it, Araquil accuses her of having sold herself, then learning of the murder of Zuccaraga, looks at Anita's hand and cries: "the price of blood! Oh God!" and dies. Anita alternately laughs and cries, and throws kisses toward Araquil's body. Garrido, who has arrived on the scene at the last moment, looks at her with pity, and murmurs, "Mad! mad! poor child!"

Negro Minstrels became a popular form of entertainment in both England and America about 1830, the performers blacking themselves up to represent negroes, and in song, dialect, and dress professing to represent the negro of the Southern plantations in America. The songs were sung in solos and choruses to the accompaniment of banjos and bones, and were woven together with a running dialogue of quaint jests, one character called Bones acting as interlocutor, while the other performers, ranged about the stage on either side of him, each contributed in turn something to the quota of fun, and the End Men, so called from their places on the stage, being second in importance only to Bones himself. A popular song of unknown authorship called "Jim Crow," said to have been first sung in Louisville, Ky., 1830, gave its name to both entertainment and performers at first. Christy's minstrels were soon famous throughout England, and there were numerous organizations of Negro Minstrels in America, one of the best known being that of Dan Rice. Many of the exquisite songs of Stephen Foster were written for these minstrel troupes. It is a mistake to assume, however, that Negro Music was ever heard at these entertainments. The American slaves and their descendants learned music as they learned the English, French, or Spanish languages, and as the dialect or patois they spoke was but a debased form of these European tongues, so the so-called Negro folk music of America is but the reproduction of the music of the superior races, modified by Negro usage. The only negro who had even published acceptable lyric verse up to 1908 in the United States was a mulatto, the late Paul Dunbar. Aside from Blind Tom WIGGINS the only other American negroes known to musicians in 1908 were Cole and Johnson, authors, composers, and interpreters of "rag-time" (syncopated) "coon songs," who were highly successful entertainers in "vaudeville." And it is worth noting that but two names of musicians of Negro blood are to be found in the history of the world's music — Coleridge-Taylor, whose mother was an Englishwoman and whose father was a native of Sierra Leone, and the mulatto violinist, Bridgetower, who assisted Beethoven in the first performance of the Kreutzer Sonata.

His other operas were "Die Hochzeitsreise," "Dörrröschen's Brautfahrt," "Nachtwächter und Student," "Am Alexandertag," "Irmingard," "Die Wilde Jäger," "Die Rose von Strassburg." Songs, choruses, ballads, and much music for male chorus increased the composer's popularity in Germany. B. Jan. 28, 1841, Baldenheim, Alsace; d. May 28, 1890, Strasburg.

Nesvera (Joseph) composed the operas "Perdita," Prague, "Waldestlust," "Der Bergmönch," symphony in G minor, violin concerto, string septet, church music; chapelmaster at Prague, Königgrätz, and Olmütz Cathedral; in early life a schoolmaster. B. Oct. 24, 1842, Horowitz, Bohemia; add. Prague.

Neumark (Georg) composed and wrote the hymn "Wer nur den lieben Gott lasst walten," which is the basis of Bach's church cantata for the Fifth Sunday after Trinity, and of "To Thee, O Lord" in Mendelssohn's "St. Paul"; musician and poet attached to the court of Weimar. B. Mühlhausen, Thuringia, May 16, 1621; d. July 8, 1681, Weimar.

Neumes were the marks employed in the musical NOTATION prior to the invention of the staff. They were a development of the ACCENTUS, somewhat resembled modern shorthand characters, and were imposed over the words to be sung. The best account of this form of notation occurs in Gerbert's "De Cantu et Musica Sacra."

Neusidler (Hans) composed lute music published in German Tablature, Nuremberg, 1536-40-44; native of Presburg. D. 1563. New England Conservatory of Music, incorporated in 1870 by a special act of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, claims 1853 as the date of its origin, since in that year its founder, Dr. Eben Tourjée, first introduced into America the Conservatory system of musical instruction. In the year 1882, the growing needs of the institution led to the purchase of an estate on Franklin Square, which it occupied until the close of the school year, 1901-2, when it became necessary to seek more ample accommodation. With the opening of the school year 1902-3 the Conservatory took possession of its new building on Huntington Avenue, corner of Gainsborough Street. This building is constructed on the most approved modern plans, is fireproof, and is especially adapted to the needs of a school of music. On the first floor are the business offices, reception rooms, a few class rooms, the music store, and two auditoriums, the basement being given over to the printing-room, tuning department, and electric plant. The larger auditorium, Jordan Hall, is the gift of Eben D. Jordan, and seats over 1000 people. The smaller auditorium, seating over 400, is used for lectures and pupils' recitals. It is equipped with a stage, scenery, and dressing rooms. The second floor of the building contains the musical library and a large number of class rooms. The third floor is devoted to class rooms and to the organ department. The Conservatory possesses a large library and museum. Students are given complete theoretical and practical training in preparation for a professional career. More than 70,000 students had been enrolled up to 1908, at which date GEORGE W. CHADWICK was the director, Wallace Goodrich dean of the faculty, James C. D. Parker, class inspector, while the faculty included: Piano: Carl BAERMANN, David S. Blanpied, Charles F. Dennée, Alfred De Voto, J. Albert Jeffery, Edwin Klahre, Frederick F. Lincoln, F. New Orleans was the first home of serious opera in America, although the people in Williamsburg, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston had enjoyed performances of ballad opera before 1791, when the first theatre in New Orleans was opened by a company of players imported from France. The old Orleans Theatre, America's first opera house, was opened in 1813 with a joint stock company under the management of John Davis. A second theatre of this name, costing $180,000, was built in 1818, and in that house many of the works of Rossini, Meyerbeer, Auber, and Mozart had their first American performance. E. P. PREVOST was one of the most notable of early conductors. The artists were brought over from France, and the opera was a favourite institution with cultured Creole society, as well as with Northern visitors. The Orleans Opera House was destroyed by fire, 1868. Meantime, however, the present building on Bourbon street had been erected for the Opera Association in 1859 by the architects Gallier & Esterbrook. Then came the Civil War, disorganization and impoverishment, and opera was discontinued until 1868, when a new opera association was formed, and a company assembled which opened with a performance of "DINORAH," with PATTI in the title rôle. It is to be regretted that since then the opera has experienced many vicissitudes. Paul Ahaiza and E. Calabresi, Placide Canonge, M. Charley, and other impresarios, while giving performances often highly meritorious and producing many works new to America, among others Reyer's "SIGURD," were unable to secure a permanent financial success, and the northern tours, the last of which was made in 1905-6, reflected no especial credit on a time-honoured institution.

New Philharmonic Society gave concerts in London, 1852-79. Berlioz conducted the first season, and was succeeded in turn by Lindpaintner, Dr. Henry Wilde, and William Ganz.

New York, the largest city in the two Americas, naturally possessed in 1909 the greatest number of important musical institutions and societies. It was the seat of the rival METROPOLITAN and MANHATTAN opera houses, had in Carnegie Hall one of the most perfect large auditoriums in the world for choral and symphonic concerts, and in Mendelssohn Hall, owned by the MENDELSSOHN GLEE CLUB, one of the most beautiful concert rooms for chamber music and vocal and instrumental recitals. The plans of the New Theatre, then in course of erection, embraced a season of opéra comique, in addition to a regular dramatic repertoire. There, too, were located the NATIONAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, and many excellent private schools, the headquarters of the KNEISEL, FLON-ZALEY, and other concert organizations, and the offices of the booking agencies by which the tours of foreign artists were arranged, and branches of the chief instrument factories and publishing houses of the whole world. New York's musical beginnings date back to 1751, when the "BEGGAR'S OPERA," already familiar to the Virginians who centred about Williamsburg, was first performed. Other ballad operas followed, and in 1791 Purcell's music to "The Tempest" was heard, but in musical development generally the city remained behind New Orleans and Boston. Versions of the "Barber of Seville," 1819, and "Nozze di Figaro," 1824, together with the activities of such managers as MAX MARETZEK, the STRAKOSCH brothers and Mozart's friend DA PONTE, and the singing of the GARCIA family, prepared the way for the opening of Palma's opera house, Feb. 3, 1844, with "Puritani," the first exclusively lyric theatre in the metropolis; and on Oct. 2, 1854, the ACADEMY OF MUSIC was opened with "Norma," the cast including Grisi and Mario. BERGMANN and THEODORE THOMAS were the pioneers in giving chamber music and orchestral concerts, and the musical progress of the community was soon proportionate with the growth of population. New York Arion was, in 1908, one of the largest and most important German singing societies in the world, having a well trained chorus of 150 active members, Julius LORENZ, director, which gave concerts and operettas. Frank VAN DER STUCKEN was musical director for many years. The Arion was especially strong in its social features, and its annual masked ball was for many years the principal event of its kind in the city. New York Aschenbroedel Verein, with a membership of more than 800 musicians; maintained a clubhouse on East 86th Street, frequented by composers, conductors, and players alike, and was famous for its jollity and good fellowship. The first home of the Aschenbroedels, opened more than half a century ago, was in Fourth Street. The members took possession of their present quarters in 1894, and since then the organization maintained a steady growth. The Catholic Oratorio Society, having an active membership of 50, gave subscription concerts. The musical director in 1908 was C. de Macchi. New York Church Choral Society was organized, 1889, on plans drawn up by Richard Henry Warren, organist of St. Bartholomew's Church for the performance of sacred music under his direction. St. Bartholomew's choir was the nucleus, and singers were drawn from other churches for the performances, which invariably took place in the churches and as religious functions. J. Pierpont Morgan and the late Rt. Rev. H. C. Potter were president and vice-president. Institute of Musical Art, which entered on its fourth year in 1908, provided for the instruction of "all lovers of music who desire to study intelligently and not superficially," as well as professional and post-graduate courses, and a special course in Public School Music. The financial basis of the Institute was an endowment of $500,000 from James Loeb in memory of his mother, known as "The Betty Loeb Memorial Fund." It had a subscription for a term of years amounting to $4000 per annum, and a guarantee fund in addition. Dr. Frank DAMROSCH, the director on the Institute's foundation, retained that office in 1908, when the faculty consisted of: Voice: William Nelson Burritt, Adriaan Freni, George Henschel, Wilfried Oswald Klamroth, Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone, Miss Emma Cecilia Thursby, Mrs. Theodore Toedt, Mlle. Madeleine Walther. Piano: Miss Helena Augustin, William H. Barber, Miss Carolyn Harding Beebe, Forrest J. Cressman, Miss Agnes Gardner Eyre, Miss Elizabeth Gallagher, Arthur Hochmann, Miss Anna G. Lockwood, Miss Virginia Lucy, Miss Mary B. Merrill, Miss Henrietta Michelson, Miss Mabel Phipps, Mme. George Sang-Collins, Mrs. Allen Lewis Seymour, Sigismund Stojowski, Mrs. Thomas Tapper. Stringed Instruments: Arthur Agiewicz, Edouard Dethier, Mark Fonaroff, Carlos Hasselbrink, Franz Kneisel, Julius Roentgen, Louis Svecenski, Violin and Viola; William Willeke, 'Cello; Ludwig Manoly, doublebass. Orchestra: Caesare Addimando, Oboe; George Barrère, Flute; Hermann Hand, Horn; Henry Léon Leroy, Clarinet; Auguste Mesnard, Bassoon; J. Fred Sietz, Timpani; Sam Tilkin, Trombone; Vincent Fanelli, Harp. Organ: Gaston Dethier. Theory and Composition: Forrest J. Cressman, Daniel Gregory Mason, Percy Goetschius. Ear-training, Sight-singing, and Chorus: Miss Vernetta E. Coleman, Franklin W. Robinson, Frank Damrosch. Pedagogy and Public School Music: Miss Vernetta E. Coleman, Thomas Tapper, Frank Damrosch. Languages: Mme. Marguerite Merlin-Albro, Miss Bertha Firgau, Edward Grossman, Edoardo Petri. Lectures: William J. Henderson, Henry E. Krehbiel, Daniel Gregory Mason, Waldo Selden Pratt, Thomas Tapper. The enrollment of students, 1907-8, amounted to 617. A circulating library of music was maintained at the Institute's building, 53 Fifth Avenue. New York Liederkrantz was organized by Dr. Hermann E. Ludwig, 1846, as the "Gesangverein der Social Reformer," but was afterwards known as the Deutscher Liederkrantz. Its purpose was the cultivation of German part-songs for male voices. Dr. Ludwig was president until his death, 1856, by which time the society was firmly established. It was an original member of the North American Saengerbund, took part in the great Mendelssohn Festival, 1848; performed "CZAAR UND ZIMMERMANN," 1851, and in 1908 was among the oldest and most substantial of the German Singing societies of America, with a membership of 1400, of whom 150 were singers, the rest associates, exclusive of a large women's chorus. The directors since the beginning were: Krauskopf, Julius Hecht, Wilhelm Müller, Weisheit, Agriol Paur, Theodore Thomas, Arthur Mees, Edward Heimendahl, Reinhold L. Herman, Heinrich Zoellmer, Dr. Paul Klengel, and Arthur Claassen. The ARION Singing Society was the outgrowth of a dissension in this society, 1854. New York Manuscript Society was founded in 1889 and gave private concerts at which the works of American composers were performed. It was reorganized 10 years later as The Society of American Musicians and Composers, and for a time gave public concerts, but soon reverted to the earlier plan of private concerts, which were held monthly during the season. New York Oratorio Society was founded by Dr. Leopold Damrosch, 1873, and in 1908 had given 73 performances of "The MESSIAH," besides the first performance of many new works. On the death of Dr. Damrosch, Walter Damrosch became conductor, giving place in 1899 to his brother, Dr. Frank Damrosch. From three to four concerts were given each year. The chorus usually numbered about 400 singers. New York People's Choral Union was the outgrowth of a sight-singing class established at Cooper Union, 1892, by Dr. Frank Damrosch. Since 1897 the union has given an annual concert with a chorus averaging about 1000 voices. Dr. Frank Damrosch was elected director for life, 1906. New York People's Symphony Concerts were established by Franz Xavier Arens as a means of extending a knowledge and love of music among the poorer classes of the East Side. From 1901 these concerts were given at Cooper Union, the price of admission ranging from 10 to 30 cents. In almost every instance the audiences filled the hall to its utmost capacity. So great was the interest aroused that a group of philanthropic people established a guarantee fund by which the usefulness of the orchestra might be increased and the permanency of these concerts assured. New York Philharmonic Society had completed its 65th annual series of concerts in 1908, at which time it was the oldest permanent orchestra in America, and the only one in which the financial management vested in the musicians themselves on a profit-sharing basis. The officers in 1908 were: Andrew Carnegie, president; Richard Arnold, vice-president; Felix F. Leifels, secretary; Henry P. Schmitt, treasurer; Wassily Safonoff, conductor. The founders of the society were U. C. Hill, C. E. Horn, William Penson, and P. Maroncelli, and the officers chosen at the first election, April 23, 1842, were U. C. Hill, president; A. Reiff, vice-president; F. W. Rosier, secretary; A. Dodworth, treasurer; W. Wood, librarian. Three concerts were given in 1842-43 under the batons of H. C. Timm, U. C. Hill, W. Alpers, A. Boucher, and George Loder. The Fifth, Third, and Second of Beethoven's symphonies were given that season, the second half of each programme being devoted to miscellaneous numbers, and from the high standard then set the society has never departed. For a time various members of the society conducted individual concerts, but in 1852-53 Theodore Eisfeld was chosen conductor for the season. Among the musicians who subsequently filled the post were: Carl Bergmann, Dr. Leopold Damrosch, Theodore Thomas, Adolph Neuendorf, Anton Seidl, and Walter Damrosch. The number of concerts were gradually increased until the growth of interest made it necessary to secure the use of Carnegie Hall to accommodate new subscribers, when eight afternoon and eight evening concerts were given each season. It may be added in conclusion that, for the most part, the services given by the individual musicians during the first half century of the society's existence were largely the labour of love. Although the organization was finally placed upon a sound financial basis, $216 was the highest dividend any member received in that period, and the individual compensation in one year amounted to $17.50. New York Russian Symphony Society, which entered upon its fifth season, 1907-8, was organized by Modest Altschuler for the purpose of making known the works of the New-Russian school. The concerts were at first given in Cooper Union, but the auditorium proving too small, Carnegie Hall was secured for the later concerts. Mr. Altschuler's orchestra numbered 75, the repertoire was in the nature of a revelation to American music lovers, and many Russian artists, including Scriabine, Petschnikoff and Lhévinne, made their debuts under the auspices of this society, of which H. E. Baron Rosen, Russian ambassador, was honorary president. New York Symphony Quintette was organized, 1908, by five soloists of the NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA to give chamber music concerts. George Barrere played flute; founded "the Société Moderne d'instruments à Vent," Paris, where he played 11 years; solo flautist the Colonne concerts and Paris Opéra; pupil of Altes, Taffanel, and the Paris Conservatoire, where he won first prize, 1895. B. Bordeaux; add. New York. Cesare Addimando played oboe; taught Institute of Musical Art; pupil of Buonoma and Vecchione, Real Collegio di San Pietro à Magella, Naples. B. Foggia, Italy; add. Vienna; add. New York. August Charles Mesnard played bassoon; prize pupil, Paris Conservatoire, and later soloist Lamoureux Concerts and Paris Opéra. B. Cognac, France; add. In 1907 Mr. Damrosch announced that a fund had been subscribed which placed his organization in the position of a permanent orchestra, that is to say, one in which the individual players found constant and exclusive employment. Norma. Vincenzo Bellini's two-act opera, to book by Romani, was first performed Dec. 31, 1831, Milan, and later with complete success in all the principal opera houses of the world. The scene is laid in Gaul, shortly after the Roman conquest. The Druids enter with their chief, Oroveso, who tells them the high priestess Norma will soon appear to cut a branch from the sacred tree, which is to be the signal for the destruction of the Romans. The high priestess has secretly married the Roman proconsul, Pollione, by whom she has two children. The Roman has not been faithful, but plans a flight to the imperial city with Adalgisa, one of the temple virgins. Instead of declaring war against Rome Norma counsels peace, declaring that the time has not yet come for success in war, and then cuts some mistletoe which she offers in sacrifice to the goddess of the Moon. A love scene between Pollione and Adalgisa follows, and the young priestess seeks Norma, begging to be released from her vows that she may go away with her lover. Norma grants her prayer, but when Pollione is pointed out as the lover she is filled with wrath, and, on learning the truth about Pollione, Adalgisa joins in denouncing him. Norma's dwelling is shown in the second act. The priestess enters, determined to kill her children, but maternal affection is too strong, so she resolves to place them in Adalgisa's care, and to expiate her fault on the funeral pyre. Adalgisa dissuades her, declaring that Pollione will return, penitent for his misdeeds.

But Pollione, madly in love, attempts to tear Adalgisa from the altar. Norma enters, summons the Druids by striking on the sacred shield, and declares war. Pollione is captured before he can leave the temple. Norma offers, if he will renounce Adalgisa, to permit his escape. He refuses, and she threatens to denounce Adalgisa, but, overcome by pity, confesses her own guilt. Such heroism arouses Pollione's earlier passion, and he ascends the funeral pyre with her. The original cast included: Norma, Mme. Pasta, sop.; Adalgisa, Mme. Grisi, sop.; Pollione, Donzelli, ten. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Meco all' altar di Venere," Pollione; "Casta diva," Norma; "Ah! bello a me ritorno," Norma; "Sgombra è la sacraselva," Adalgisa; "Va, crudele," Pollione; "Perdoni e ti compiangio," Norma and Adalgisa. Notation is the term employed for those systems of symbols whereby compositions in music may be permanently recorded. Music is the only universal language, and the notation now universally used has resulted from a process of evolution no less gradual and complex than that of language itself. The ALPHABET which suffices to record such ideas as may be expressed in words is obviously unfit to suggest pitch, rhythm, the combination and duration of tones, to say nothing of the rhetorical graces and shades of expression without which music becomes mechanical and tedious. If any man shall invent a system whereby full scores can be more easily read than the examples here reproduced, he will be a public benefactor. Meantime it is important that the difficulties of the present system be not exaggerated. In the keyboard of the piano and other instruments having Equal TEMPERAMENT, the Octave, that is to say the range of tones between the tone resulting from any given number of vibrations, and the tone which results from double that number of vibrations, is divided into twelve nearly equal semitones. There is a difference between A sharp and B flat when correctly played on instruments of the violin family, or sung, but where Equal Temperament prevails this difference is only theoretical, a compromise of both semitones sounded by a black key, serving for each. The first step in the notation of pitch is the Staff , which consists of five straight horizontal lines. If the range of tones to be noted shall exceed those which can be represented on or between these five lines, or immediately below the lowest or above the highest line, Ledger Lines  are added.

Since it is more convenient to record tones without resorting to Ledger Lines, a Clef is employed to accommodate the compass of voices and instruments to the staff, of which several varieties are employed. The C Clef stands  or for c' (Middle C), no matter what its position on the staff may be. Whatever line it grips represents c', and when it occurs on the first or lowest line it is called the Soprano or Discant Clef; on the third line it becomes the Alto Clef; and on the fourth line the Tenor Clef. The most important Clefs are the G or Treble Clef, which is always placed on the second line, and the F or Bass Clef, both of which are essential to the notation of music for the piano. The staff modified by the G Clef represents the following tones:

Modified by the F Clef, the Staff represents:

A single Ledger Line for c' is sufficient to bring these two registers together. The Staff may be thus compared to a ladder, the rungs and spaces of which indicate the height or depth of a tone. But the tones indicated by the Staff are whole tones or natural tones, such as those sounded on striking only the white keys of the piano. The semitones are indicated by the Sharp ( $\sharp$ ), which when prefixed to a note raises its value one semitone; the Flat ( $\flat$ ) which lowers the note to which it is prefixed by a semitone; and the Natural ( $\natural$ ) which cancels the effect of either a Sharp or a Flat. The Double Sharp ( $\times$ ) raises the value of a note two semitones; the Double Flat ( $\flat\flat$ ) lowers its value two semitones; and the double chromatics are cancelled by the Natural in combination with the Sharp ( $\sharp\sharp$ ) or Flat ( $\flat\flat$ ). Sharps, Flats, and Naturals occurring occasionally in notation are called Accidentals. Only the Natural key of C can be represented without the use of accidentals, however, and to avoid the endless repetition of these characters throughout a composition in the other keys, it is customary to group either the Sharps or Flats necessary to a given key after the Clef, indicating that the notes which follow are to be modified accordingly until further notice. These groups of Sharps and Flats indicating the key are called the Signature, and the signatures of the various keys are as follows, the signature of a major key serving also for that key's relative minor, although the tonic of the minor key is a minor third below that of

B ; F# ;

C# ; F ;

Bb ; Eb ;

Ab ; Db ;

Gb ; Cb . The

characters which have now been given are the only ones now used to represent pitch. The duration of a tone is indicated by the shape of the note employed, and there is a mark of silence or Rest for each note. The longest note now used is the Breve (||:|:|) which is almost obsolete; then the Whole Note or Semibreve (o), half as long as the Breve; the Minim or Half Note (♩); the Crotchet or Quarter Note (♪); the Quaver or Eighth Note (♫); the Semi-quaver or Sixteenth Note (♬); the Demisemi-quaver or Thirty-second Note (♭); the Hemidemisemi-quaver or Sixty-fourth Note (♮). The eight Rests corresponding to these notes are (—), (—), (z), (v), (7), (7), (7), (7).

The actual duration of a note, however, is again modified by tempo, a thing which the METRONOME now renders exact. "M.M. ♩ = 100", for example, would indicate that quarter notes are to be played at the rate of 100 per minute. Verbal directions regarding tempo, such as ANDANTE, ALLEGRETTO, ALLEGRO, etc., without such Metronome marks, are highly indefinite. Tempo has already been used as meaning speed, for which the Italian word Movimento would seem a better term; but it also means TIME or RHYTHM. The unit of rhythm is the MEASURE, which is the space enclosed between two Bars

ber of BEATS determined by the Time Signature. In modern notation the Semibreve or Whole Note is the common length of a Measure, and it may be indicated by C, which means that the Measure includes one Semibreve or its equivalent, or 2, which means that there are four beats, each of the value of a Crotchet. The signature for Alla Breve Time is C with a perpendicular line drawn through it (C), or 3, which formerly had four minims to the Measure with two beats. So-called A Cappella time has the same signature. For all other Time Signatures fractions are employed, the upper figure giving the number of beats to the measure, the lower the value of the notes or their equivalents. Rhythms which are divisible by two are called Duple or Common Time. Included in this heading are the following varieties: 2/2, 3/2, 2/4, 3/4, 4/4, 5/4, 6/4, 3/8, 6/8, 9/8, 12/8, 4/16, 8/16, 12/16, 16/16. Under Compound Duple Time are found: 3/2, 3/4, 6/8, 9/16, 12/16, 12/8, 12/4, 24/16. Rhythms which are divisible by three are called Triple Time. The figure 3 serves as a time signature for 1 as well as the fraction. Other varieties of Triple Time are: 3/8, 3/4, 3/2. Compound Triple Times are: 9/4, 9/8, 9/16, 9/4, 9/8, and 9/4.

For the notation of Pitch in the body of this work by means of ACCENTS, see Table of Abbreviations or C. Definitions of all abbreviations will be found under their proper titles. Numerals are employed to indicate, besides Time, FINGERING, CHORDS; and in such combinations as 4-tette, Quartet; 1-ma, Prima; Man. 1., Great Organ; Man. 2., Choir Organ; and Sva., OTTAVA. The following signs in notation are defined under their proper titles: DOT (·); STACCATO (◌); FERMATA, (◌); Mezzo STACCATO (◌); MARTEL-LATO (||), BIND, TIE, or SLUR; (—); Mezzo LEGATO, (—); TENUTO or PESANTE (—); Forte TENUTO, (—); Thumb in FINGER-ING, (× or +) PRESA, (S or S:);

their music. With the Roman conquest of the world the Greek system of notation disappeared, and by the fifth century the first fifteen letters of the Roman alphabet were employed to designate the degrees of the scale. The reduction in the number of letters to seven may have been effected by St. GREGORY THE GREAT. At any rate the first seven Roman letters were used in noting liturgical music, although they ceased to be written after the eighth century, by which time the system of dots, accents, and other signs known collectively as NEUMAE had come into general use. Reminders of the older system may be found in LUTE TABLATURE, of which an example is given herewith; as well as in the present names of the tones of the scale, and

characters are sometimes employed for special instruments. Thus in organ music, ( * , ⊕ , + ) mean release damper pedal; ( |w| , □ ) show where pedal is to be pressed and released; ( □ □ ), heel and toe. In violin music, ( v ) means up bow; ( ▭ ) down bow, etc. The notation of Greek music was accomplished by means of the letters of the alphabet arranged in conventional forms, upright, inverted, or slantwise, which served well enough for the record of melodies, although the system was complex and would have been useless had the Greeks harmonized of the clefs. The Neumae in themselves, however, while serving their original purpose of ACCENTS admirably, and likewise showing the number of notes to be sung to a given portion of text, failed to indicate pitch, and were at best, therefore, merely aids to the memory of the singers, who were required to learn the melodies by rote and tradition. Toward the close of the eighth century, abbreviations for tempo and expression first came into use, and manuscripts preserved by the Roman Catholic Church show the first trace of the present system of notation about 900. A red line occurs in these manuscripts, drawn above the text and marked F. All neumae placed on this red line were then understood to represent f, while such as appeared above the line were of higher pitch, and those below the line, of lower pitch. The next advance in notation was the addition of a second line, this time of yellow, to indicate c'. HUCBALD, a monk of St. Amand in the tenth century, invented a staff of many lines in which the spaces indicated the tones and semitones of the scale, the text being written in the spaces. He complicated his system by reverting to the Greek tetrachordal characters, and it soon fell into disuse. Early in the eleventh century, GUIDO of Arezzo either invented the four line staff or adapted the idea from some other churchman, whereon as with us, notes were written on both lines and

spaces. By the thirteenth century the fifth line was added, and the neumae had begun to disappear before the Large, the Double Long, the Long and the Breve, prototypes of the notes now in use. The next important step in the development of notation was the adoption of the Bar from Lute Tablature, and with it a more definite rhythmic form than had been possible or indeed needful in earlier notation. Then came the abandonment of the church MODES for the modern Major and Minor Scales, since which time the tendency has been to simplify as far as possible whatever difficulties remained in the recording of music. Thus the GRACES which proved so troublesome to students a few generations ago have nearly all become obsolete. The first full score of record is that of Peri's "Euridice," 1600. In that work the

Nozze di Figaro. Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's four-act opera buffa, to book by da Ponte after the Beaumarchais comedy, "Le Mariage de Figaro," was first performed May 1, 1786, at the Vienna National Theatre, and, though soon withdrawn there, has remained one of the best loved works of its class throughout the world. The first part of the adventures of the illustrious Figaro are given in the "BARBER OF SEVILLE." Almaviva, somewhat wearied of his lovely countess, makes love to her maid, Susanna, with whom Figaro is deeply enamoured. Susanna and the Countess conspire to arouse the jealousy of Almaviva by means of the page Cherubino, to whom the Countess pays many attentions. They are completely successful in this, but the Count is none the less determined to exercise his seigniorial rights over Susanna, and Figaro is equally determined to keep Susanna for himself. Meantime matters are complicated by Bartolo, who has been rejected by Susanna, and Marcellina, who holds a written promise of marriage from Figaro. They unite to prevent the happiness of their faithless loves. The Count is delighted at having an excuse for forcing Figaro to marry any one other than Susanna, but Figaro proves that he is really the son of Bartolo and Marcellina, and has a happy reunion with his long lost parents. The Count tries to rid himself of Cherubino by giving him a captain's commission and sending him to the wars. The Countess and Susanna disguise the page in women's clothes, but, although the Count recognizes him, he has received a note from Susanna appointing a meeting, and does nothing to prevent the long delayed marriage ceremony at which Figaro and Susanna and Bartolo and Marcellina are united. The final act represents a garden at night. Susanna and the Countess have exchanged clothing. The Count mistakes his wife for Susanna; the page, who has tried to flirt with the Countess, whom he believes to be Susanna, consoles himself with Barberina, and Figaro, mad with rage, is delighted when he finds that the supposed Countess is really his Susanna. Finding Figaro with the woman he assumes to be his wife, the Count calls for lights, the women unveil, the Count humbly supplicates pardon for his conduct, the Countess graciously consents to be reconciled to her husband, and, of course, Figaro and Susanna are left to their happiness. The music reveals Mozart at his best, and in writing of the first performance, Kelly records: "Never was there a greater triumph." The original cast included: Almaviva, Mandini, bar.; Figaro, Benucci, bass; Basilio and Don Curzio, Occheley (Michael Kelly), ten.; Cherubino, Mandini, sop.; the Countess, Storace, sop.; Susanna, Laschi, sop.;

He was driven from Mexico by a revolution, settled in Buffalo, where he soon obtained a number of pupils. In 1864 he again visited Mexico, but political conditions prevented him from being well received. In 1901 Capt. Hernandez, military attaché of President Diaz, visited Buffalo on business connected with the Pan-American Exposition, met Nuno, and on his return to Mexico, began an agitation for the composer's recognition. The newspaper "El Plis" lent its aid, and in September, 1901, the veteran musician made a triumphal tour of Mexico, was received with national salutes, heard his hymn sung by choruses of children, received a chaplet of gold from Mexico City, a silver medal from Pueblo, a handsome purse raised by popular subscription, in a word, such an ovation as had never been accorded a composer in America before. His next and only important appointment was as conductor at the Théâtre Français, where he composed "Chanson de Fortunio" for A. de Musset's play "Chandelier." "Pepito," his first operetta, was produced without success at the Variétés, 1853. In 1855 he became manager of a small theatre, and in the same year acquired the Théâtre Comte, which he renamed "Bouffes Parisiens," and there his success was immediate and lasting. In 1860 his ballet-pantomime, "Le Papillon," was produced at the Académie, and the following year he retired as a manager, although he later controlled the Théâtre de la Gaité, 1873-75, devoting himself to composition. Open Scores are those in which each part has a separate line as opposed to those in which more than one part is written to the line, or close or short score.

Open Strings. Unstopped strings.

Opera is the one form of entertainment in this prosaic age by which mankind may yet scale Heaven (with Marguerite), wallow in the mire below (with Herod and Salome), descend into the waters under the earth (with Alberich), or into Hell (with Orpheus); may gain the heights of Monsalvat (with Parsifal), explore the sad charms of Bohemia (with Mimi) or the commonplaces of the workaday world (with Louise). Nothing can be too absurd or improbable, too heroic or too criminal to serve the purpose of the highly conventionalized combination of music, the drama and all the arts, known by that name. It is the unreality of opera that charms. To analyse it as one would a play, a book, a painting, or a work of absolute music, would merely destroy the pleasure it affords. It must be accepted with the childish spirit of those who believe in Santa Claus. It deals with fairy tales and ghost stories for grown people. It is wholly unnatural, forced, impossible, but has grown in popular favour for 300 years, and is still young, perennially fresh and vigorous. It is customary to ascribe a Greek origin to opera. In the remote ages when a great orator, who had cured himself of stammering by learning to speak with his mouth full of pebbles, strengthened his voice by declaiming so loudly that the roar of the surf could not drown his words, music was already an art and a science. The orators and players in order to send their words to the remotest parts of the theatre adopted a kind of chant or sing song, which may have resembled that of the older school of our own tragedians in uttering blank verse. There was an orchestra composed of flutes, under which name both oboes and flutes were included, of lyres and percussion instruments. The chorus voiced its explanatory comment on the text as to-day. But there was no harmony. The Greeks, who regarded music as a branch of mathematics, invented the monochord and devised a most ingenious system of modes, loved melody, and with melody were content. During the period of the Italian Renaissance, when scholars and nobles tried to revive the beautiful in art by the study of that people whose life was beauty itself, Galilei, father of the astronomer, Peri, Caccini, Cavaliere, and other musicians, who were wont to gather at the home of Count di Vernio in Florence, resolved to restore the drama of the Greeks. The Church Modes were modelled upon the Greek theory of music, in so far as the early churchmen were able to grasp it, and these worthies sought to rediscover the declamatory style of the Athenians. Peri's "Dafne," privately performed at the Corsi Palace, was among the first efforts in this direction, 1597, and three years later, at the marriage of Henri IV of France with Maria de Medici, his "Euridice" was performed in public. These were tragic operas. As early as 1262 a comic opera by Adam de la Hale had been performed at Arras, in France, and in 1285 his "Jeu de Robin et Marion" had been received with delight by the French court at Naples, and in its Mysteries or Miracle plays the church had fostered dramatic performances with more or less musical accompaniment. But the coterie in Florence had begun their creative work at the psychological moment, and their "Dramma per la Musica" or Opera in Musica (work in music), sung in a new style, not unlike what Wagner was pleased to call "aria which is recitative and recitative which is aria," and which they termed "stilo rappresentativo" or "Musica Parlante" (speaking music), became the fashion. Then came the revolution, headed by Monteverde, against the Polyphonic School of Composition, the growth of the science of harmony, and the development of the modern orchestra; and, since the Church retained its preference for the older music, the composers of the new school found in opera the best outlet for their genius. Throughout Italy, then to France, to Germany, to England, went composers and singers, taking with them operas which everywhere excited the interest of courtiers and musicians, and everywhere inspired others to attempt fame and fortune by means of opera. Eventually there grew up in France the opéra comique, in Germany the singspiel, in Italy the commedia dell'Arte, in which the common people might find their thoughts and aspirations reflected; but in court circles Italian opera continued to reign supreme. Perhaps the most formidable revolt was that headed by Gluck, a thorough musician, trained in the arts of Italy, by birth a German, but a reformer and, after Lulli, the foremost of early composers of French opera. The world had become somewhat more enlightened regarding the Greek drama in his day, and the orchestra had gained in power of expression, while the principles of harmony were more generally understood. Gluck aimed to purify opera, to prune out the excrescences which had grown up about Italian opera. What he did for France Weber was later to do for Germany, and what Weber left undone was attempted by Wagner, who dominated German music after him, giving a new impetus to operatic composition, and again endeavouring to return more closely to the old Greek model. How well Wagner may have succeeded is for future generations to say, but it is worth noting that, while he liked to speak of the "music of the future," "the new music" was a phrase in the mouths of the Italians generations before him. This much may be said, that he revived an interest grown somnolent, and that the music of the new Russians and the Young Italians, however little it may resemble that of the composer of the Ring of the Nibelungen, is none the worse because of him and his theories. When Italian opera had grown past the control of the men who believed, rightly or wrongly, they were reviving the glory of ancient tragedy, the tendency in Italy was to look upon the opera libretto merely as a necessary peg on which to hang such glorious texture of music as might cause the book itself to be forgotten. The later German ideal assumed that music which detracted from the interest in the progress of the drama itself was bad music, and that the purpose of music, as well as of architecture, of lighting, of costuming, and of acting was merely to enforce the dramatic interest of the text. And it is well to reflect that under the one set of theories we have had sparkling comedies which lose nothing of their power of exciting laughter because wedded to charming melody, and that from the other we have the extraordinary spectacle of the protagonist of a music-drama standing for 40 minutes with his back to the audience while the interest is centred in subordinate characters. There is so much that is beautiful in the operatic music of every people and of every school, so much that is silly in the controversies of those who pose as partisans of any school that the true music lover may pass from the operas of Donizetti to those of Wagner and from the operas of Mozart to those of Verdi with pleasure in all. But he should first murmur with all due reverence "help thou mine unbelief" and leave the everyday world behind him in the cloak-room, for opera is the convention of unreality. In this book will be found the stories of the most of the operas now sung in the chief opera houses of the world, with the names of hundreds more, long since forgotten, in biographies of the composers. A new work by John Towers, however, has the significant title "Dictionary of 27,015 Operas and Operettas." From it are taken the names of the most popular of operatic subjects, the figures showing the number of times each has been scored for the operatic stage: Achille in Sciro, 29; Adriano in Siria, 46; Alessandro nelle Indie, 55; Andromeda, 18; Antigone, 15; Antigono, 28; Arc, Jeanne d', 17; Armida abbandonata, 26; Arminio, 17; Artaserse, 63; Berenice, 20; Catone in Utica, 22; Cid, 16; Circe, 19; Cleopatra, 27; Colombo, Cristoforo, 21; Coriolano, 18; Dafne,

Opéra Bouffe. Fr. Comic opera.

Opera Buffa. It. Comic opera.

Opéra Comique. Fr. Opera in which the dialogue is spoken, not sung, whether the subject be tragic or comic.

Opéra Comique is the name of the fine Paris theatre erected 1898 for the performance of opéra comique. The title, as applied to a theatre, dates from 1715, when the establishment of a house devoted to this form of opera was agreed to by the direction of the Académie de Musique Royale. Too much prosperity aroused the ill-will of other managers, and the house was closed in 1745 to be reopened in 1752. Ten years later the company was merged with that of the Comédie Italienne. A rival Opéra Comique was founded in 1791, with ruinous results to both, and another merger was effected, 1801, and from that until 1829 the Théâtre Feydeau was the home of opéra comique. In 1887 the Opéra Comique was destroyed by fire, and, until the erection of the new house, performances were given in what later became the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt. See SUBSIDIZED THEATRES.

Opera Grand. Opera in which the dialogue is in recitative; opera seria or sérieux.

Opera, Grand. The splendid home of serious opera in France, and one of the models of the SUBSIDIZED THEATRE, of which PARIS is the centre, passed under the management of MESSAGER and Broussan in 1908, who were backed by a subscription fund of 1,400,000 francs, and signalized their first season by a performance of the "RING DES NIBELUNGEN," and a number of Russian works, the latter being given by a company under the patronage of Grand Duke Vladimir. James Stillman, Otto Kahn, and Mortimer Schiff, well known patrons of the Metropolitan Opera in New York, subscribed $5000 each to the support of the new management. The early history of the Paris Opéra, as it is called in this work, may be traced under ACADEMIE DE MUSIQUE. The seating capacity of the house was 2200, and in 1908 the conductors were Paul Vidal, Rabaud, Busser, and Bachelet.

Opera Lyrique. Lyric or ballad opera.

Operetta. Short opera of light quality.

Operist. Ger. Opera singer.

Ophicleide. "Keyed serpent." Brass instrument which is being replaced by the TUBA, supposed to have been invented by Fricot, 1790, with keywork similar to that of the Kent BUGLE, of which it formed the bass. Earlier instruments were sometimes partly or wholly of wood like the Zinken or SERPENT, but afterwards were wholly of brass. There were three sizes: a bass set in C, B flat, and A flat, compass A flat to a'; an alto in F and E flat, with a compass of two and a half octaves; and a contrabass, like the alto, but an octave lower.

Opus. L. "Work." The Op. number shows either the order in which a composition was begun or that of publication.

Oratorio had its beginning in the Mysteries or Miracle plays produced in every country of Europe under the auspices of the Roman Catholic clergy during the Middle Ages. The name came into use by reason of the efforts of St. Philip of Neri to attract young people to divine services held in his "Oratory" by performances of sacred music, composed expressly for his use by the best musicians of his generation. These compositions, known at first as "LAUDI SPIRITUALI," were in madrigal style, and became highly popular throughout Italy. Giovanni Animuccia, chapelmaster to the Oratory, published a collection of them, Rome, 1563. While the Florentine musicians were inventing the OPERA, Emilio del Cavaliere, who had himself produced two pastoral dramas in Florence, was composing a work called "La Rappresentazione di Anima, e di Corpo," with soli, chorus, and recitatives to orchestral accompaniment, which was, in fact, "Dramma sacra per Musica," or sacred opera, given with costumes and with dancing in that same oratory at Rome over which St. Philip of Neri had long presided. Thereafter oratorio possessed dramatic form, although it has long ceased to be given with action, costume, or scenery. From Italy, where it was soon overshadowed by opera, the oratorio spread to the other parts of Europe. The church cantatas of Bach and his Passions, according to St. Mark and St. John, may be regarded as its highest expression in North Germany. In England the oratorio was Handel's recourse when opera was no longer profitable. Its extraordinary popularity may be accounted for not only by the religious temperament of the race, but by the fact that here, at least, was one art form in the vernacular which must have been a blessed relief after the Italian warblings at the rival opera houses of Handel and Bononcini. The effect of that long series of oratorios, of which "The MESSIAH" was the culmination, was to impose a cult upon the English people which they have not yet shaken off, and which finds expression in America as well. The next great oratorios were "The CREATION" and "The SEASONS" by Haydn, which were and are more popular in England than in Germany, a statement equally true of the "ELIJAH" and "ST. PAUL" of Mendelssohn and of the "St. Elizabeth" of Liszt. The educational effect of the oratorio has been of the highest value. Requiring large and carefully trained choruses for their performance, the English and American musical festivals which have done so much to disseminate the best music in every form were organized, in almost every instance, primarily for oratorio singing.

Orazi ed i Curiazi. Domenico Cimarosa's three-act opera, to book by Sografi, was first performed, 1794, at Venice.

Orchesis. Gr. The art of dancing. Orchesographie. "Description of dancing." A work of that title by "Thoinot Arbeau" or Jehan Tabourot was published at Langres, 1588. It contains the notation of many then popular dance tunes.

Orchestik. Ger. ORCHESIS. Orchestra. The modern grand orchestra, of which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an excellent type, is the result of a long period of evolution or of accretion. The number of musicians required has been gradually increased, the quality, proportion, and form of the instruments has varied. Before considering the orchestra of the early classic period and without speculation as to the orchestra of the future, it may be worth while to note the personnel of such an organization as that already named in 1908. Besides the concertmeister there were 15 1st violins, 16 2d violins, 10 violas, 10 'cellos, 8 doublebasses, 4 flutes, 3 oboes, 3 clarinets, 3 bassoons, 1 cor anglais, 1 bass clarinet, 1 contrabassoon, 8 horns, 4 trumpets, 3 trombones, 1 tuba, 1 harp, 4 tympani, and 2 percussion. Mozart was content to score his Symphony with Fugue, 551, Köchel, popularly known as the "Jupiter Symphony," for 2 violins, viola, bass, flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, and kettle-drums. Bach's D major Suite for orchestra was scored for 3 trumpets, 2 oboes, kettle-drums, and a complement of strings which about equalled those employed by Mozart. Beethoven was satisfied to add two clarinets to the forces Mozart had employed. At the performances of Cavaliere's ORATORIO the orchestra consisted of harpsichord, double lyre, bass lute, and two flutes. Peri's OPERA "Euridice" required but a harpsichord, bass guitar, bass lute, and a lyre or viola da gamba. Monteverde is said to have employed an orchestra of 36 pieces for the production of his "Orfeo," 1608, but much of his score was in figured bass, and it cannot be known with certainty how many parts were actually heard in performance. Later, as at the HANDEL COMMEMORATION larger orchestras were assembled, but until Berlioz began to write for several bands and choruses in a single work, and Wagner required additional brasses for the expression of his ideas, permanent orchestras of large proportions were unknown and unneeded. There is a curious resemblance, it will be noted, between the small tone of the classic orchestra and that of the favourite solo instrument of the period, the clavier. Modern auditoriums have grown larger, modern composers noisier, modern audiences, no longer of the court but of the people, sitting in concert rooms ten times the size of those for which the best music of the classic period was written, would lose the nuances of the works if performed by the instruments for which they were scored. The word orchestra is derived from the Greek, meaning "dancing place." It was a space in front of the stage in which a raised platform was built for the accommodation of the chorus. The early composers of opera applied the name to the place allotted their musicians, and it is now employed to designate the place, the musicians, or the instruments.

Organ. The only solo instrument capable of simulating the effect of a grand orchestra, and therefore the most complex and difficult as well as the most cumbersome and costly of all musical instruments, is one of the most ancient, has been constantly enlarged and improved by each succeeding generation, and will doubtless occupy the energies of musical mechanics and inventors for centuries to come. Some of the world's largest organs have been built in America, notably those of the Cincinnati Music Hall, the Salt Lake City Temple, the Chicago Auditorium, and a gigantic organ erected in Boston, but which no longer exists. The largest organ in the world in 1908 was that in Festival Hall, St. Louis, which was 30 ft. deep, 70 ft. wide, and 50 ft. high, possessed 5 manuals, pedal clavier, 10,059 pipes distributed among 140 speaking stops, 99 mechanical appliances, and cost $100,000. The principle of the organ may be studied in the Syrix or Mouth Organ, the invention of which was attributed to Pan, and which may well have been the organ of Jubal, "Father of all such as handle the harp and organ." Each pipe of the organ, like those of the Syrix, produces a single tone. The largest organs of to-day are merely a grouping of such pipes, varied in size, form, and material, and therefore in pitch and timbre, blown by an artificial wind supply instead of that furnished by the lungs, and which may be used in almost endless combinations. The pipes of an organ are either of wood or metal, in the latter case composed of an alloy of lead and tin and sometimes zinc. They may again be classified as either REEDS or FLUTES, in the one case the pitch depending upon the number of vibrations of the Reed, in the other upon the vibrating length of the column of air in the pipe itself. A group of PIPES of homogeneous quality and affording a partial or complete scale are grouped together in a Register or Stop, a series of such groups are connected with the manual, clavier or keyboard, and may be sounded singly or together. The larger modern organ may have five manuals or claviers, which would be called respectively, Great, Choir, Swell, Solo, and Echo manuals, each complete in itself; and a Pedal Clavier, worked with the feet and possessing its own stops. Any two or all of the manuals and the pedal clavier may be combined at will by means of COUPLERS, and this gigantic combination of tones would be the Full Organ. In such an organ the great pipes of 32 ft. pitch, operated from the pedal clavier, and most of the 16 ft. stops, operated also by pedal, and some of the larger pipes attached to Great Organ manual would be arrayed in front, to please the eye, while the smaller stops would be hidden behind them. In considering the mechanism of the organ, the keyboard and the stops are referred to as the ACTION. The wind supply in modern organs is provided by a bellows operated by hand or foot power, in the case of the smaller instruments, as was the rule in earlier ages. For the larger instruments the wind is furnished by pneumatic pump, operated by hydraulic pressure, an electric motor, or an engine. In any case it is of the highest importance that an even pressure of wind be provided, and there is usually a storage bellows to ensure this. Thence the wind passes by a conduit or wind trunk into a wind chest, or wooden box. By pulling out a draw knob the wind is admitted to pass to the pipes of a particular stop, and, by depressing a digital on the keyboard, passes into a pipe, causing it to sound or "speak." Who was first to apply the artificial wind forces of the bagpipe to the PIPES OF PAN history does not say. In Kircher's "Musurgia" are illustrations of pipes set in wind chests, which he ascribes to the Chaldeans and Hebrews. Ctesebius, an Egyptian, is said to have invented the HYDRALUS, or water organ, 250 B. C., and Nero was a performer on it, even though the fiddle was of later invention. Pneumatic organs of simple form are said to have been used by the monks of the 4th and 5th centuries. In the 8th century an organ presented to Pepin by the Byzantine Emperor was placed in the Church of St. Cornelius, Compiègne, France, and Charlemagne placed an organ presented to him by Haroun Alraschid in the Church of Aix-la-Chapelle, about 826. St. Dunstan built an organ with brass pipes for Malmesbury Abbey, Eng., in the 10th century, and in the 12th century the pipes were classified into stops. For a time the action was so hard that the keys could only be depressed with the fist or elbows. In the 14th century the pedals were invented, and in the 15th century reed pipes were first employed. For many succeeding generations, however, the instrument was slow in speaking, clumsy in performance, and the first instrument of really noble proportions was that of St. Mary's Church, Lübeck. During the term of the famous BUXTEHUDE as organist this instrument had three manuals, pedals, and in all 57 stops. For many years the Great and Choir organ were absolutely distinct, and located in different parts of the churches, the latter being exclusively used as accompaniment to the voice. With the invention of the Swell and Echo this distribution of force was no longer necessary. Its effect has been retained, however, in such modern instruments as that of the Chicago Auditorium, where certain ranks of pipes are ingeniously arranged in the ceiling, although operated from a single console.

Orpharion. Obsolete wire stringed instrument of the zither family, with six or seven pairs of strings tuned like those of the LUTE.

Orphée aux Enfers. Jacques Offenbach's three-act opéra bouffe, to book by Hector Crémieux, was first performed Oct. 21, 1858, at the Bouffes-Parisiennes. Eurydice is gathering flowers in the meadows of Thebes with which to decorate the hut of Aristeus, a shepherd with whom she has become infatuated, but who is really Pluto. Orpheus, believing her to be a shepherdess, comes in to serenade her, playing a fiddle instead of the lyre. Enraged at each other's infidelity they quarrel, and, having cast off the old love, part in search of the new. Aristeus meets Eurydice in the field, reveals himself as the god, summons a tempest, and, in the midst of the storm, carries Eurydice off to Hell, but not before she has written a note to Orpheus, giving her new address. Orpheus is delighted at having gotten rid of her, but Public Opinion commands him to ascend Olympus and ask Jupiter to restore his wife to earth again. Accordingly, the second act opens in Olympus. The gods and goddesses are enjoying a nap, from which they are roused by a blast from Diana's hunting horn. The new celestial scandals are then discussed, including the most recent, Pluto's abduction of Eurydice. When that god appears he is bitterly reproached by Jupiter, and retaliates by describing some of Jupiter's earthly love affairs, thus arousing the jealousy of Juno. Aided by Cupid, Juno is making a scene, when Public Opinion and Orpheus enter. Jupiter gladly agrees to personally assist Orpheus in recovering his wife, and descends into Hell in the third act, where he finds Eurydice guarded by John Styx. Having disguised himself as a fly, Eurydice catches him, whereupon he reveals himself, and transforms Eurydice into a bacchante. A convivial scene follows, which terminates abruptly upon the arrival of Pluto. Then the other gods appear, and finally Orpheus sails up the Styx, playing his fiddle, and demands his wife of Jupiter. On condition that he shall return to his boat, Eurydice following, and neither looking back, Jupiter agrees to this demand, but just as Orpheus reaches the boat Jupiter launches a thunderbolt, Orpheus turns about, and thus again loses his wife, greatly to his own delight and to the disgust of Public Opinion. Orpheus thereupon sails back to his shepherdess.

Orphée et Euridice. Serious operas by Gluck and others bearing this title are referred to under ORPHEUS.

Orphéon is the general title of the singing societies which have grown up in France since the introduction of singing in the public schools and colleges, 1835. From 1852 to 1860 Gounod was director of a choral union formed of various Orpheonistes of Paris, but so greatly did the societies multiply that, on his retirement, it was found necessary to divide the city into two sections. After the Franco-Prussian war these were again united under Bazin, who continued as director until his death, when he was succeeded by his pupil Danhauser. The best French composers lent their talents to the movement, which spread into Belgium, where the male part song has become equally popular. In France alone there were 3243 societies with a total membership of 147,500 in 1867. As many as 3000 singers are sometimes assembled in the Orphéon festivals, and international competitions are held by the French and Belgian singers.

Orpheoreon. ORPHARION.

Orpheus has been the subject of innumerable operas, from that of Caccini and Peri, to book by Rinuccini, performed as "Euridice," 1600, and generally regarded as the first serious opera, and the "Orfeo" of Monteverde, performed seven years later, to those of Sartorio, Draghi, the young Lully, Keiser, Fux, Graun, to that of Christoph Willibald Gluck, the greatest of them all. This work, to book by Calzabigi, was first performed Oct. 5, 1762, in Vienna, as "Orfeo ed Euridice," and Aug. 2, 1774, as "Orphée," at the Paris Académie de Musique. For the latter production the rôle of Orpheus was transposed from contralto to tenor, but since Berlioz' revision, has again been assigned to contralto. The story differs from the Greek legend in having a happy ending, but both book and music were an attempt at strict conformation to Greek ideals. The rising curtain discloses the tomb of Euridice, about which nymphs and shepherds are mourning. With an outburst of grief Orpheus commands them to leave him. As he muses on his sorrows, the god of Love comes to tell him that his laments have moved Olympus to compassion, and that Jupiter has ordained that Orpheus may descend into Hades and bring back his wife to the world, provided he can refrain from looking at her until their return to earth. In the second act Orpheus is at the gates of Hell, where demons and furies oppose his entrance until he sets them dancing with the notes of his lyre, then calms them and moves them to pity with the story of his love and loss. A change of scene reveals the hero in Elysium with the blessed shades. He calls for Euridice, and the shades bring her to him with joyful songs. She is heavily veiled. The last act reveals a cavern through which the lovers are about to emerge upon the earth. Euridice, amazed that Orpheus has not caressed nor even looked at her, reproaches him for loving her no longer. At length, overcome with love and sorrow, Orpheus turns and looks at her. He has violated his pledge to the gods, and she falls dead. He cries out in despair, and is on the point of killing himself, that he may rejoin Euridice among the shades, when Love again appears and restores Euridice to life. A joyous chorus breaks forth as the lovers embrace, and the opera concludes with a ballet. The principal characters are: Orpheus, con.; The Happy Shade, sop.; Love, sop.; Eurydice, sop. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Chiamo il mio ben così," Orpheus; "Euridice! ombra cara," Orpheus; "Gli sguardi trattieni," Love; Act II: "Chi mai dell' Erebo," chorus of demons and furies; "Mille pene," Orpheus; "Che puro ciel," Orpheus; "Vienni ai regni del riposo," The

Happy Shade; Act III: "Che fiero momento," Euridice; "Che faro senza Euridice," Orpheus; "Trionfi amore," chorus.

Otello. Giacomo Rossini's opera, to book based on Shakespeare's tragedy, was first performed Dec. 4. 1816, at the Fondo, Naples, but never achieved wide popularity. Giuseppe Verdi's four-act opera, to book by Boito, in which the English tragedy is still more closely followed, was first performed Feb. 5, 1887, at La Scala, Milan, and later with complete success in other musical centres. An excellent production in English was given by the Henry W. SAVAGE Opera Company. In the condensation of the text Boito makes the opera begin with the arrival of Otello in Cyprus. There seems to be no need of repeating the story of the Moor's undoing and the death of Desdemona, rôles created by Tamagno, ten., and Sig. Pantaleoni, sop., while the original Iago was Maurel, bar.; and it will suffice to give the principal musical numbers: Act I: "Fuoco di gioia," soldiers' chorus; Brindisi, Iago, followed by the chorus "Inaffia l'ugola-trinca tra canna"; "Mio superbo guerrier," Desdemona; "Venga la morte," Otello; "Gia nella notte densa," Desdemona and Otello; Act II: "Credo in un Dio crudel," Iago; "Misericordia," Otello; "Dove guardi splendo," children's chorus; "Addio sublimi incanti," Otello; Act III: "Dio ti giocondi," Otello and Desdemona; "Dio mi potevi scagliar," Otello; "A terra! si, nel livido," Desdemona; Act IV: "Piangia cantando" (Willow song), Desdemona; "Ave Maria," Desdemona.

Ouvert. Fr. Open.

Ouverture. Fr. OVERTURE.

Overblow. To increase the wind pressure, and thus force a pipe to speak an upper partial instead of its fundamental note. The upper octaves of the flute's compass are produced by overblowing. The overblowing of an organ pipe, which is generally averted by the waste pallet, is a scream rather than a musical sound.

Overend (Marmaduke) composed an "Epithalamium" for the marriage of George III of England, 12 sonatas for two violins and cello; published "A Brief Account of, and Introduction to, Eight Lectures on Music"; pupil of Dr. Boyce. D. 1790, London.

Overtones. Upper partial tones or HARMONICS.

Overtura di Ballo. It. Overture in the style of dance music.

Overture. "Opening." Operas and oratorios are usually preceded by an instrumental prelude, which may be built out of the principal themes of the work which is to follow, or may be quite independent of them. The overture or "Sinfonia" to Monteverde's "Orfeo" was very brief, as was that to Wagner's "Lohengrin." Beethoven composed no less than four overtures to his only opera, "Fidelio," and Verdi's "Otello" and many other operas have no overture whatever. Overtures are nearly always in the sonata FORM, being, in fact, similar to the first movement of a symphony, on a somewhat larger scale. In all cases the overture is a complete work in itself, may be given in concert form, and it sometimes happens that concert overtures are composed which have no relation to any dramatic work.

B. 1685, Erfurt; son of JOHANN; d. about 1764.

Pachmann, de (Vladimir) played piano, touring the world as virtuoso, especially admired for interpretations of Chopin, but somewhat given to such eccentricities as commenting to his audience upon the music during a performance; knight of the Order of the Dannebrog; pupil of the Vienna Conservatory, and of his father, an amateur violinist and professor at Odessa University. B. July 27, 1848, Odessa; add. Berlin.

Paderewski (Ignaz Jan) played piano in concerts and recitals, debut in 1876, making repeated tours of the world from 1887, when he was cordially received as virtuoso in Vienna and Paris, and attained exceptional popularity in America, where he was engaged in 1909, then becoming director of the Warsaw Conservatory; composed the opera "Manru," A minor concerto for piano and orchestra, Op. 17; sonata for piano and violin, Op. 13; humoresques de concert (containing the popular minuet in G), Op. 14, songs and piano pieces. A pupil of Raguski at the Warsaw Conservatory, Paderewski taught for a time in that institution, then settled in Berlin, where he studied with Urban and Wüerst, and in 1884 became a pupil of Leschetizky in Vienna. His extraordinary success in America was due not less to his remarkable mastery of the piano than to the ingenuity of the press agent who invented romantic stories, and to the cartoonists who found a wealth of material in his hair. Despite the sensationalism which marked his early tours, he established himself as an artist of the first rank, and proved his gratitude to the American people by founding the Paderewski Fund, May 15, 1900. $10,000 was placed in the custody of Henry L. Higginson and William P. Blake, of Boston, and every three years, from the income of this sum, cash prizes were awarded for the best compositions by American composers. In 1902 cash prizes of $500 each were awarded Henry K. Hadley for his symphony, "The Seasons"; to Horatio W. Parker for his "Star Song" for chorus, soli, and orchestra; and to Arthur Bird for his wind sextet. The only prize awarded at the next competition was adjudged to Arthur Shepherd, of Salt Lake City, for his "Overture Joyeuse." B. Padua was the home of the Costanti Accademia, founded 1566 for the cultivation of the arts and sciences, music included, and of the University where Marchetto di Padova taught music between the years 1274-1309. The Paduana or PAVAN probably originated there.

Paduana or Padouana. PAVAN.

Paeon. Gr. Hymn to Apollo, so called from the words constituting its refrain.

Paër (Ferdinando) composed "Camilla, ossia il Sotteraneo," 1801; "Eleonora, ossia l'Amore conjugale," 1803 (also the subject of "FIDELIO"); "Agnese," 1811; "Le Maître de Chapelle," 1821, and in all 40 operas, the oratorios "Il santo sepolcro," "La Passione," a Bacchanalian symphony, church and chamber music; was chapelmaster to Napoleon I, 1807 to 1812, when he succeeded Spontini at the Italian opera; member of the Académie and director of the King's chamber music, 1832; pupil of Gasparo Ghiretti, and a chapelmaster in Venice at 20. B. June 1, 1771, Parma; d. May 3, 1839, Paris.

Paganini (Niccolo) became the most famous virtuoso violinist of all times, acquiring a technique so marvelous that he was thought to be in league with supernatural powers, was really the first to develop a complete harmonic scale for violin and to obtain certain effects in double stopping and pizzicato by means of special tunings, and, while undoubtedly a man of genius, rather a charlatan than a wizard. Paganini's father, who was employed in the shipping business at Genoa, gave him his first instruction on the mandolin and violin, but treated him with great severity. After further instruction by the violinist, Servetto, the child was placed with Giacomo Costa, chapelmaster at the Cathedral, and in two years, being then nine years of age, he appeared at a concert given in Genoa by the singers Marchesi and Albertinotti, where he played his own variations on "La Carmagnole." At Costa's suggestion he then played solos in the Cathedral each Sunday, acquiring an extensive repertoire. Gnecco, the composer, befriended the young violinist, and in 1795 he was taken to Parma to study with Alessandro Rolla, and gave a successful concert in that city. It is probable that he studied for two years with Ghiretti and several months with Rolla. In 1797, after a successful tour of Lombardy with his father, the boy, then 13 years old, shook off parental control, and played in various Italian cities. Falling into bad company, he pawned his violin to pay a gambling debt, but on the eve of a concert for which he was billed in Leghorn, Livron, a French merchant presented him with the splendid Guarnerius, which was thereafter his favourite instrument, and which, under the terms of his will, is preserved in the Sala Rossa of the Genoa Municipal Palace. From 1801 to 1804 Paganini was involved in a love affair which occasioned his retirement to Tuscany, during which time he devoted himself to the guitar and to composition. This interregnum in his public career subsequently gave rise to the story that he had been imprisoned, and there practised playing a violin for which a hard-hearted jailor would allow him but one string. In 1805 he again appeared as a violinist, and was appointed court virtuoso to Elisa, Princess of Lucca and sister of Napoleon. He was soon director of music, conductor of the opera orchestra, and (that he might be admitted to court functions from which a mere musician would be debarred) Captain of the royal body-guard. "Scene Amoureuse," for two strings, and the G string sonata, "Napoleon," were composed in the service of the Princess. A series of tours of Italy began in 1808, and in 1813 Princess Elisa, then Grand Duchess of Tuscany with court in Florence, having refused to permit him to conduct wearing his captain's uniform, Paganini left her service and devoted himself entirely to concert work. In 1820 he was rich enough to settle 30,000 francs on his mother. In 1828 he captivated the court of Vienna. Pope Leo XII had made him knight of the Golden Spur, the Emperor made him court virtuoso, and the municipality of Vienna gave him the gold medal of St. Salvator. After sensational tours of Germany he made his debut in Paris, 1831, where he was received with wild enthusiasm, and then visited London, where he demanded $25,000 for 12 concerts, and received a total of between $80,000 and $85,000 in less than a year. While in Paris, 1834, he requested Berlioz to write him a viola solo, and thus inspired "Harold en Italie." A present of 20,000 francs to Berlioz rescued that composer from despair, and may be regarded as typical of Paganini's generosity, despite Sir Charles Hallé's gossip that the money really came from Bertin of the "Journal des Débats." In 1836 Paganini lent his name to a gambling house venture in Paris, which cost him 50,000 francs, but this sum he easily recouped by concerts. He had received the Order of St. George from the Duchess of Parma, and was at the height of his fame and power, but the privations of childhood had begun to tell upon a constitution never robust, and in 1839 he was ordered to the South by his physicians. He played in Marseilles with old time vigour, and then returned to Genoa. There his disease, phthisis of the larynx, became more acute, and he went to Nice to pass the winter. His improvisations during the last few days of his life were said to have been wonderful, and his last act was to stretch forth his hands for his violin. The bulk of his estate, amounting to $400,000, went to his son by the dancer Antonia Bianchi, known as Baron Achillino. During his lifetime the only compositions published were 24 caprices for solo violin, 12 sonatas for violin and guitar, three grand quartets for violin, viola, guitar, and 'cello. Posthumous publications include: Concerto in E, Op. 6; Concerto in B minor, Op. 7; "Le Streghe" (Witches Dance), Op. 8; variations on "God Save the King," etc., Op. 9; Burlesque variations on "Le Carnaval de Venise," Op. 10; "Moto Perpetuo," Op. 11; Variations on "Non più mesta," Op. 12; Variations on "Di tanti palpiti," Op. 13; 60 variations in all keys on the Genoese air "Barucaba," Op. 14. The discovery of 14 more works was reported in Genoa, Nov., 1907. Biographies were written by Fétis, Paris, 1851, Eng. trans.; A. Niggli, O. Bruni, Schottky, Schutz, and others. B. Feb. 18, 1784, Genoa; d. May 27, 1840, Nice.

Page (John) edited "Harmonia Sacra," London, 1800, and other collections of music, sacred and secular; sang ten.; deputy at Eng. Chapel Royal; clerk of St. George's Chapel. B. Dec. 3, 1790; d. 1812, London.

Pagin (André Noel) composed six violin sonatas, published with bass and also with harpsichord accompaniment, Paris, 1748; played violin; pupil of Tartini. B. 1721, Paris; d. after 1770.

Pagliacci. Ruggiero Leoncavallo's two-act opera, to his own book, was first performed May 21, 1892, at the Teatro del Verme, Milan, and has since become popular throughout the world. Whether the story is based on an incident in life or borrowed from Catulle Mendes' "La Femme de Tabarin" is unimportant, since the fact remains that, as treated by Leoncavallo, it is so highly dramatic that it was performed as a play in English in 1908, while the music is very beautiful and effective. The Pagliacci, wandering show people, arrive at an Italian village where they prepare to give a performance. The company is composed of Canio, who plays the rôle of Punchinello; Nedda, his wife, who is the Columbine; Tonio, the Clown, and Beppe, the Harlequin. Tonio, who loves Nedda, ventures to tell her so, but is rebuffed, and finally slashed across the face with a whip. He swears revenge, and a few moments later overhears Nedda planning to elope with Silvio, a young villager. Tonio tells Canio of his wife's infidelity, and the husband surprises Nedda and Silvio together, although Silvio escapes without being recognized. Beppe prevents Canio from killing Nedda, and preparations for the performance are resumed. The second act discloses a little rustic theatre facing a row of benches in the open air. Tonio collects the peasantry by beating his drum, and, as they assemble, Silvio makes an appointment with Nedda, who is taking up the money from the spectators. The curtain of the little theatre rises, disclosing a situation which, to the actors, is reality itself. The Columbine of the play is entertaining her lover, the Harlequin, and planning to poison her husband, PUNCHINELLO, while the Clown awaits the husband outside, meaning to warn him. PUNCHINELLO (Canio) enters just in time to hear his wife making an appointment with her lover, and demands to know his name. Columbine refuses to tell. PUNCHINELLO is no longer acting, but living the tragedy of his own life, and, as he breaks down with emotion, the audience applauds the reality of the scene. Again PUNCHINELLO demands the name of the man who has injured him. Again Columbine refuses, but, realizing her danger, calls aloud for help. Silvio rushes toward the stage, but, before he can reach it, PUNCHINELLO has plunged his dagger into Columbine, and in a moment more stabs Silvio. Then Canio cries to the horrified spectators: "The comedy is finished!" and the curtain falls. In lieu of an overture there is a splendid prologue, sung before the curtain by Tonio. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "O, che volo d'angelo," Nedda, and her duet with Silvio, "E' allor perchè"; "So ben che difforme," Tonio; "Vesti la giubba," Canio; Act II: "O Columbine, il tenero fido arlecchin," Beppe (as the Harlequin); "Suvvia, così terribile," Nedda.

Paine (John Knowles) obtained the first recognition of music as an elective course in an American college, and was made professor of music, Harvard University, Aug. 30, 1875, the first American to hold such an office;

distinguished himself as a teacher, organist, pianist, and composer. After preliminary musical instruction from Hermann Kretschmar in Portland, Me., Paine became a pupil of the Berlin Hochschule, under Haupt, Wieprecht, and Teschner. Before returning to America he made a successful tour of Germany as organist, but in 1862 settled in Boston as instructor in music, also serving as the college organist for the next 10 years. His first important composition, a Mass in D, was performed in 1867 by the Berlin Singakademie, the composer conducting. The oratorio "St. Peter" was produced at Portland, Me., 1873, and later by the Boston Haydn and Handel Society. A symphony in C minor, the Spring symphony in A, and the symphonic poem "An Island Fantasy" were all produced by Theodore Thomas, and in 1888 his "Song of Promise," a cantata, was a feature of the Cincinnati May Festival. Other compositions were: music to "Œdipus Tyrannus" and "The Birds," a setting of Whittier's hymn for the Philadelphia Exposition, a Columbus March and Hymn for the World's Fair at Chicago, Stedman's "Hymn of the West" for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904, an overture to "As You Like It," the symphonic poem "The Tempest," the cantatas "Phœbus Arise," "The Realm of Fancy," and "The Nativity." "Azara," a grand opera on a Moorish subject, like most serious operas by American composers, has never obtained a hearing, although composed in 1901. The composer received an honorary M.A. from Harvard, 1869, and the degree Mus. Dr. from Yale, 1890. B. Jan. 9, 1839, Portland, Me.; d. April 25, 1906, Boston.

Paisible (James) composed overtures and incidental music for "King Edward the Third," "Henry IV," "She would and she would not," sonatas, and duets for flute; headed the King's Band of Music in London, 1714-19.

Paisiello (Giovanni) composed a "BARBER OF SEVILLE" which the Roman public preferred to that of Rossini; was the favourite composer of Napoleon I, who made him his chapelmaster, and, on his retirement, permitted him to name Lesueur as his successor. A pupil of Father Carlo Presta, S.J., in childhood, Paisiello manifested talent at a very early age, and was placed in the San Onofrio Conservatory in Naples, where he was a pupil of Durante, Cotumacci, and Abos. A dramatic intermezzo performed at the Conservatory won the young composer two commissions for comic operas from Bologna. "La Pupilla" and "Il Mondo a Rovescio," with which he filled the order, were well received, and "L'Idolo Cinese" was a success in Naples, although he there encountered the rivalry of Piccinni and later of Cimarosa. From 1776 to 1784 he was in the service of Empress Catherine of Russia. Returning home by way of Vienna he composed eight symphonies for Emperor Joseph II and the opera "Il Rè Teodoro." For 12 years from 1784 he was chapelmaster to Ferdinand IV of Naples, where he produced the operas "Nina," "I Zingara in Fiera," and "La Molinara." His connection with Paris began in 1797, when he composed a funeral march for General Hoche, by order of Napoleon, then General Bonaparte. Called to Paris to organize the music of the First Consul, Paisiello composed church music, the opera "Proserpine," and awakened the wrath of Méhul and Cherubini, who were jealous of the favour accorded him. Returning to Naples, he became chapelmaster to Kings Joseph and Murat, but lost his pensions and honours on the return of the Bourbons, although permitted to retain his salary as chapelmaster. In all Paisiello composed about 100 operas, the best of which have been mentioned; a Passion oratorio, Te Deum with double chorus and two orchestras, 30 masses with orchestra, a requiem with orchestra, which was performed at his funeral, 40 motets, etc. The best biography is that of his friend Lesueur.

B. May 9, 1741, Taranto; d. June 5, 1816, Naples.

Paix (Jacob) composed organ music in Tablature, masses, motets; played organ at Lauingen and Augsburg. B. 1556; son of the organist of St. Anne's; d. 1590, Augsburg.

Paladilhe (Émile) composed the opera "Patrie," founded on Sardou's drama, Paris Opéra, Dec. 20, 1886, later in Hamburg as "Vaterland," and Milan as "Patria"; the lyric drama "Saintes Maries de la mer," 1892; two masses, "Fragments Symphoniques," and two symphonies. Pupil of Halévy in the Paris Conservatoire, Paladilhe won the first piano prize, 1857, and in 1860 the organ prize and the prix de Rome with his cantata "Le Czar Ivan IV." Returning from Rome he composed Coppée's one-act play "Le passant," Opéra Comique, April 24, 1872, which became highly popular. "L'Amour Africaine," three years later, proved a failure, as did "Diana," Opéra Comique, 1885. In 1881 he received the Legion of Honor and became a member of the Académie in succession to Guiraud. B. June 3, 1844, Montpellier; add. Paris.

Palestrina (Giovanni Pierluigi) composed the "MASS of Pope Marcellus," still regarded as the highest type of religious music; averted with this and other compositions, contemplated action of the Council of Trent discontinuing the use of music in the churches; reformed the liturgical music of Rome; began a careful revision of the Roman Gradual and Antiphonal, completed by his pupil Guidetti; was the supreme master of polyphonic music. In 1540, then a boy of about 14, the future composer left the little town from which he took his name for the Eternal City. Tradition says he was received into the choir of Santa Maria Maggiore by Maestro Pittoni, who heard him singing in the streets. Another legend has it that he became a pupil of Goudimel or Gaudio Mell, but it is certain, in any case, that on Oct. 28, 1544, he was sufficiently accomplished in music to be appointed to a canonry in Palestrina, where he sang the daily office, taught, and played organ. Three years later he married Lucrezia di Goris, but continued to reside in Palestrina until 1551, when he was called to Rome as the first chapelmaster of the Julian Chapel in the Vatican, Rubino and his other predecessors having been styled masters of the boys, of the music, or of the choir. In 1554 he dedicated a volume of masses to Pope Julius III and the following year was made a singer in the Pope's private chapel, in violation of the rules, for he was neither a celibate, in orders, nor a good singer. The death of Julius and the brief pontificate of Marcellus II was followed by the succession to the papal throne of Paul IV, who promptly dismissed Palestrina from the chapel, although allowing him the pension of six scudi monthly. For a time the composer was prostrated by mortification and worry over his poverty, but in two months' time, Oct., 1555, he became chapelmaster at the Cathedral of St. John Lateran. While holding that post he composed the famous IM-PROPERIA, which the same Pope Paul IV caused to be sung in the Apostolic Chapel, a custom which still continues in Rome; a set of Magnificats, and the hymn "Crux Fidelis." In 1561 he became chapelmaster at Santa Maria Maggiore, where he remained 10 years at a salary of 16 scudi per month. It was during this term of office that the Council of Trent, disgusted at the artificiality which had crept into church music, and still more at the prevailing habit of the composers of adapting street songs as canti fermi for the mass, was prepared to banish music from the churches altogether. A commission of eight Cardinals, appointed by Pope Pius IV, first undertook to ascertain if reforms were possible, and, on hearing the Mass of Pope Marcellus (Missæ Papæ Marcelli), concluded it to be the model of what church music should be, a decision afterwards confirmed by papal brief. Palestrina's reward was a grant of the full pay of a singer in the Pontifical Choir, a stipend continued by

Pius V and the six pontiffs who reigned after him. In 1571 Palestrina was re-elected to his old post as chapelmaster of the Vatican. There he remained for life, for though Pope Sixtus V wished to appoint him maestro of the Sistine Chapel, the singers declined to serve under a layman. His activities were not confined to church music, although he was prolific in the composition of motets and masses, for in 1555 he issued a volume of 22 madrigals. Moreover he was a highly successful teacher, and in 1576, at the request of Gregory XIII, undertook the laborious revision of the church music, aided by Guidetti, which was published in Rome, 1582, as "Directorium Chori." He had enjoyed the friendship and patronage of Cardinal d'Este, and in later life that of Cardinal Buoncompagni. His fame had extended throughout Europe, and his income, if not large, was sufficient. His happiness was clouded, however, by the loss of his sons and pupils, Angelo and Ridolfo, and the death of his wife, 1580, while the remaining son, Igino, proved a thorn in his flesh. The sincerity of his grief found expression in the "Super flumina Babylonis" and other motets, but a year later he married a wealthy widow, Virginia Dormuli. He then made 29 settings of the "Song of Solomon," dedicated to Pope Gregory XIII, regarded as his finest work with the exception of the Mass so often referred to. These were published in 1584, and reprinted more frequently than any of his other works. The mass entitled "Assumpta est Maria in Coelum," dedicated to Sixtus V to make amends for some pièces de circonstance, occasioned the trouble with the Sistine Choir, which ended, after the Pope had disciplined his singers, in Palestrina composing three new masses for that organization. From the remaining period of his life date the Lamentations, the Hymnal for every day in the year, the great Stabat Mater, and 30 5-part Madrigali spirituali. During his last hours, while suffering from pleurisy, Palestrina gave the directions for publishing his manuscripts to his son Igino, and then received the sacraments from his friend and confessor, St. Philip de Neri. B. about 1525; d. Feb. 2, 1594. The principal biographies are by Baini, Rome, 1828; A. Paris is the home of the SUBSIDIZED THEATRE, under which head were included besides the houses devoted to drama, the OPÉRA, OPÉRA

COMIQUE and Gaieté Théâtre, the latter devoted to lyric drama from 1908. It is likewise the home of the most notable teaching institution devoted to musical art in the whole world, the Paris Conservatoire, to use the popular name employed in this book for the CONSERVATOIRE NATIONALE DE MUSIQUE ET DECLAMATION. As most of the instrumental musicians and singers were educated in the Conservatoire, it is natural that among the most important musical events of the season were those given under its auspices, a special organization known as the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire being in charge. These concerts were founded by HABENECK, 1828, incidentally to secure the performance of his own works, and gave programs of symphonic proportions which grew in importance until it became necessary to repeat the same program on consecutive Sundays that seats might be found for all the subscribers. The orchestra consisted of 84 musicians and the conductors in succession to Habeneck were Gerard, Tilmant and Deldevez. There were 32 members in the chorus and the standard of performances, as well as the selection of works was uniformly maintained on the highest plane. The Concerts Populaires, founded in 1861 by PASDELOUP, were highly important in introducing new works and in forming public taste, while of more recent date were the concerts bearing the names of their founders LAMOUREUX and COLONNE. It should be observed, however, that despite its supremacy in so many directions, the French capital, like the American metropolis, lacked a permanent orchestra; that is to say, no orchestral body required and compensated its musicians for their full time. There were numerous organizations such as the old Société des Quatuors de Beethoven and the more recent Société des Instruments à Vent devoted to classic and modern chamber music and the ORFEON had cultivated the art of part singing to a high degree of perfection.

Of the many excellent non-official music schools with which the city abounded the most important, in view of the recent reforms in church music inaugurated by Pope Pius X, was the Schola Cantorum. This was founded 1896 by CHARLES BORDES, ALEXANDRE GUILMANT, and VINCENT D'INDY for the especial study of GREGORIAN CHANT and the works of PALESTRINA and other masters of the polyphonic schools. Monthly concerts were given directed by d'Indy, at which the works of the old masters were admirably performed; and the school published "Les Tablettes de la Schola" in which to record its own progress, and a number of ancient and modern compositions. In 1908 there were more than 300 pupils of both sexes, and there were societies for the support of the institution in many of the provincial cities. There were scholarships and a scale of fees to the students participating in concerts by which it was possible for many to work their way through. Paris had its musical beginnings in the reign of Louis XIV, who established the ACADÉMIE DE MUSIQUE, 1669. The next most notable of Paris musical institutions was the Concert Spirituel founded in 1725 by Anne Danican PHILIDOR. Twenty-four concerts per annum were given on those solemn days of the church year when the opera house was closed. With greater or less artistic and financial success, these concerts were continued until the beginning of the French Revolution, affording not only instrumental and choral music, but introducing many notable foreign musicians. But while neither French nor operatic music could be given on the terms by which the Opéra permitted these concerts to exist, they were hardly more religious in character than the sacred concerts which are a feature of the Puritanical Sunday in some parts of America. GOSSEC was conductor of the Concert des Amateurs founded in 1770, which 10 years later became the Concert de la Loge Olympique, where Haydn's Symphonies were first made known to France and for which he composed six symphonies. The Concert de la Rue de Cléry, 1789, and the Concert Feydeau, 1794, were modelled on Gossec's enterprise, and in 1805 the Concerts Spirituel were revived for strictly religious music at the Opéra during Holy Week.

Parisian Symphony was the name given W. A. Mozart's work in D (Köchel 297), because it was composed in Paris and first performed June 18, 1788, at the Concert Spirituel.

Parisienne. Casimir Delavigne's cantata celebrating the defeat of Charles X by the Parisian troops was first sung Aug. 2, 1830, at the Théâtre Port St. Martin, but the air had been previously used in his "Le Baron de Trenck." Auber said that the original of this once popular song was a folk song dating back to 1757.

Parisina. Gaetano Donizetti's three-act opera, to book by Romani, founded on Byron's poem, was first performed Mar. 18, 1833, at the Pergola Theatre, Florence. W. Sterndale Bennett's overture in F sharp minor, Op. 3, was first performed June 8, 1840, by the London Philharmonic Society.

simas," the "Star Song" cantata which won the PADEREWSKI prize, 1901; concerto for organ with orchestra and harp, 1901; succeeded Robbins Battell as professor of music, Yale University, 1894; played organ. Dr. Parker's mother, born Isabella G. Jennings, was his first teacher. At 15 he composed Kate Greenaway's "Under the Window" in two days, and then became a pupil of Emery, Orth, and Chadwick, Boston. In 1881 he entered upon a three years' course of study at the Munich Hochschule, organ with Rheinberger. Returning to America he taught and played organ at the Garden City (L. I.) Cathedral and school, and for a while was instructor in counterpoint at the NATIONAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC, and also playing organ at churches in New York and Boston. "Hora Novissima," performed at English festivals, Worcester and Hereford, won him the degree Mus. Dr. from Cambridge, and he was made M.A. by Yale University, 1894. In 1880 his "Scenes from Prometheus Unbound" and a piano concerto in F sharp minor were performed, the former at the Gloucester Festival, the latter by Dannreuther at the Crystal Palace, winning immediate recognition for the composer. Shirley's ode, "The Glories of our Blood and State," which he composed for the next Gloucester Festival, and "The Blest Pair of Sirens," sung by the Bach Choir, 1887, established him as a favourite composer for choral societies, while his literary talent was displayed in poems, the libretto for his "Judith," in "Studies of the Great Composers," "The Art of Music," "Summary of Musical History," etc. Other notable works: "O Lord thou hast cast us out," for his degree at Oxford; Intermezzo Religioso, Gloucester Festival, 1868; four symphonies, music to "The Birds," "The Frogs," "Agamemnon," and "The Clouds" (Greek plays), the oratorios "Job," "King Saul," anthems, services, several collections of songs, chamber music, suites, Pope's ode, "St. Cecilia's Day," for soli, chorus, and orchestra; "L'Allegro ed Il Penseroso" (Milton), "Invocation to Music," to words by Bridges, soli, chorus, and orchestra; anthem and processional for the coronation of Edward VII, "The Love that Casteth out Fear," sop. and bar. soli, semi-chorus, chorus, and orchestra; overtures "To an Unwritten Tragedy" and "Guillem de Cabestanh."

Parsifal. Richard Wagner's "Bühnenweihfestspiel" or consecrational stage festival play was first performed July 28, 1882, at the Festspielhaus, Bayreuth. It was the composer's last work, and differed in poetic form from the plays of RING DES NIBELUNGEN in having rhymed instead of alliterative verses, although musically on the same plan, with Leit Motifs ingeniously recurring. Like his earlier "Lohengrin" it was based upon legends of the Holy Grail, "Lohengrin" being, in fact, son of "Parsifal." By the terms of Wagner's will the performance of this work was restricted to the Festspielhaus until 1913, and until 1903 it was so restricted. There had been performances of the work by choral organizations with orchestra in London and New York, without action or costumes, but on Dec. 24 of the year named it was produced at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, under the management of Heinrich von Conried, the occasion being his annual benefit. The Wagner family had bitterly opposed this production in court and through the press, certain American clergymen had been induced to denounce it from their pulpits as sacrilegious in its treatment of the Eucharistic sacrifice, and in consequence it was the best advertised production ever made in America. It should be added that it was one of the most careful. Scenery, costumes, and the cast were the best that could be assembled, the rehearsals were supervised by Felix Mottl, who was trained in the traditions of the work at Bayreuth, but who relinquished the baton to Alfred Hertz at the performance, to escape the wrath of Frau Wagner; and the stage mechanism was constructed by Anton Fuchs, stage manager of the Festspielhaus itself, as well as of the Munich Opera. The capacity of the house was sold out, orchestra chairs disposed of at $10 each, reaching a premium of $75 before the performance. A very excellent production in English was then given throughout the country by Henry W. Savage, but the American interest in "Parsifal" soon died out, and it had been entirely shelved in 1907-8. The Vorspiel, based upon the Grail motif already familiar from "Lohengrin," a call for trumpets and trombones identified with the Knights of the Grail, and a chorale associated with the Grail itself, is soon concluded, and the curtain discloses a forest scene within the domain of the Grail, and near the Castle of Monsalvat. Gurnemanz, an ancient knight, awakens two young squires. After the morning prayers, a procession bearing King Amfortas on a litter descends from the Castle that the sovereign may find comfort in his bath from a grievous wound. In a lengthy monologue Gurnemanz tells the squires of the King's great sin and punishment. Klingsor, a magician, the enemy of the Grail and those whom it protects, has built a wonderful castle and filled it with lovely women who seduce the knights from their duty to the Grail. While trying to overcome the magician, Amfortas himself fell victim to the witchery of one of these women, lost the sacred spear with which Christ had been pierced while on the cross, and was wounded by that weapon in the hands of Klingsor. From this wound there can be no recovery so long as the spear remains with Klingsor. A voice from the Grail has declared that "a guileless fool, the chosen one," alone could effect a cure. Kundry enters, bringing balsam from Arabia to assuage Amfortas's pain. Doomed to eternal laughter for having jeered at Christ upon the cross, Kundry lives a twofold existence. As Kundry she is the faithful servant of the Grail and its knights, hideous, clothed in rags. But at Klingsor's summons she appears, lovely, seductive, in the magic castle, and, though the knights at Monsalvat do not know it, it was Kundry who overcame their king. Then a dying swan sinks to the ground, though every form of life is sacred in the Grail's domain. Parsifal is dragged in by two knights, who charge him with murder. To the questions put him he only answers "I do not know," but Kundry tells of his parentage, that he was reared in the desert, and that "Herzeleid" (Heart's affliction), his mother, is dead. At this Parsifal flies at Kundry's throat, but as she sinks to the ground Gurnemanz drags the lad away, and again reproaches him for his savage nature. Then, thinking this may be the guileless fool, he takes him to the Castle of the Grail, where the solemn feast is about to be celebrated. The Grail is that holy vessel from which Christ drank at the Last Supper, and in which his precious blood was received on Calvary. Enshrined in the great hall of the castle, it invests with supernatural power the knights assembled for its protection and affords them sustenance as well. Facing the shrine and without motion or word Parsifal sees the pages, squires, and knights enter in solemn processional, sees the Grail unveiled upon the altar, hears the old King Titurel comforting his son, but commanding that the solemn rite proceed. Amfortas, moaning with pain, lifts the holy vessel, which suddenly shines blood red in a bar of light; then an unseen chorus chants the words: "Take My blood in the name of our love, and take My body in remembrance of Me," the ceremonial of the Communion is performed, the procession files slowly out, the light grows dim, and Parsifal is alone. Mystified by what he has seen, Parsifal makes unintelligible replies to Gurnemanz's questions, and is cast forth from Monsalvat. The next act reveals the magic castle of Klingsor, who summons Kundry that she may aid him to overcome Parsifal. Vainly she protests, for Klingsor's power is mighty. As Parsifal approaches the scene suddenly shifts to the garden, filled with flowers, and with maidens dressed as flowers. Their enticements avail nothing against the "pure fool," but Kundry, now a lovely woman, talks to him of his mother, then gives him a passionate kiss. Parsifal is suddenly enlightened, and feels Amfortas's wound burning in his heart. He spurns Kundry, who calls upon Klingsor. The magician appears, armed with the sacred spear, which he throws at Parsifal; it remains suspended in mid-air, and Parsifal grasps it and makes the sign of the cross. Then Klingsor, the flowers, the flower maidens, and the castle itself are replaced by a desert in which Parsifal and Kundry are alone, and, as Parsifal departs, she calls after him "Thou knowest where only thou canst see me again." Some years are supposed to have elapsed when the curtain rises again, once more disclosing the precincts of the Grail. Gurnemanz, now an aged man, lives as a hermit, waited upon by Kundry. It is Good Friday morning, and the spell of spring is upon the fields. Parsifal enters, clad in full armour, and carrying the sacred spear, which is immediately recognized by Gurnemanz, who hails him as King of the Grail Knights. The aged Titurel, no longer nourished by the Grail, which Amfortas refuses to again unveil, has died, and the funeral rites are about to begin. Gurnemanz and Kundry wash Parsifal's feet, cloth him in the white robe of the knights, and then, pausing only long enough to baptize Kundry, Parsifal permits himself to be led to the shrine. The knights demand that Amfortas perform the office upon which their life depends. He begs that they kill him instead. Then Parsifal touches the King's wound with his spear, and it is healed. Parsifal proclaims himself King, and prepares to perform the oblation. As he does so the Grail is again illuminated, a white dove descends from the dome of the shrine toward Parsifal, the knights bend in homage, and Kundry, at last forgiven, falls dead. Again the unseen choir chants:

"Miracle of Supreme blessing, Redemption to the Redeemer."

The original cast at Bayreuth consisted of: Kundry, Materna, sop.; Parsifal, Winkelmann, ten.; Gurnemanz, Siehr. In the New York production the cast was: Kundry, Ternina; Parsifal, Burgstaller; Gurnemanz, Muehlmann; Klingsor, Blass; Amfortas, Van Rooy.

century by St. Gregory Nazianzen, Bishop of Antioch. It was sung throughout, and may have been in imitation of the earlier Greek tragedies. From the 13th century the Passion was chanted to Plain-Song melodies by the clergymen in Roman Catholic churches during Holy Week. Pastoral Symphony. Ludwig van Beethoven's Sixth Symphony, in F, Op. 68 (originally known as No. 5), is interesting, aside from its great intrinsic beauty, as the most famous of that master's occasional incursions in the realm of PROGRAMME MUSIC. The most elaborate indication of Beethoven's intentions is obtained by weaving together his notations on the first violin part with that of the programme of the concert at which the symphony was first performed, Dec. 22, 1808, at the Vienna Theater an der Wien: "Pastoral Symphony, or Recollections of country life. (More expression of feeling than painting.) 1, Allegro ma non molto. The pleasant feelings aroused in the heart on arriving in the country. 2, Andante con moto. Scene at the Brook. 3, Allegro. Jovial assemblage of country folk, interrupted by, 4, Allegro. Thunderstorm, tempest, interrupted by, 5, Allegretto. Pleasurable feelings after the storm, mixed with gratitude to God." KNECHT had employed a somewhat similar description of a wholly different work 20 years before, but Beethoven's note on a sketch for the first movement that "the hearer is to be allowed to find out the situations for himself" was wholly ignored by commentators, who have added as many words to Beethoven's own "programme" as there are notes in the score. The absurdity of such literary addenda is, however, quite overshadowed by a performance given in London (Drury Lane, Jan. 30, 1864), in which the symphony was performed as a dramatic work, with action and scenery.

Peabody Conservatory of Music was founded at Baltimore, Md., 1868, as part of the Peabody Institute, with an endowment which freed the management from financial entanglements usually so detrimental to art. The first year there were 606 pupils, but in 1907-8 the enrollment had grown to 1182. The Conservatory has quarters in the Peabody Institute, with access to its large library and art gallery, and possesses three auditoriums, the largest with a capacity of 1100. There are numerous concerts each season, although there is no longer need of orchestral concerts such as those given under Asger Hamerik's direction, which were highly praised by von Bülow, 1876. An excellent primary department, presided over by Miss Mary Harretson Evans, prepares students for entrance to the conservatory proper, where the course of study includes: harmony, composition, piano, sight reading, accompanying, voice, organ, violin, 'cello, harp, orchestral instruments, solfeggio, ear training, acoustics, history of music, musical appreciation, pedagogy, dramatic expression, English, French, German, Italian. been admitted to the bar, studied music under Joseph Panny at Mainz for four years, returned to England, 1829, but soon settled at Karlsruhe. His first work in music was cantata "Saul and the Witch of Endor," composed at 13. A Miserere mei, Domine, composed as a three-part perpetual canon, published during his sojourn at Karlsruhe, is numbered, however, as Op. 1. A ballet opera, also composed there, was never performed. His madrigals were inspired by hearing performances of the Bristol Madrigal Society while on a visit to England. Pedal. Name of the levers in pianos, organs, and harps, so called because worked with the feet. The Piano's Forte, or Loud Pedal, by raising the dampers, enriches the tone, permitting the Partial to sound from other strings; its Piano or Soft Pedal enables the performer to strike only one instead of two or three strings, or by other device reduce the volume of tone. Harp pedals serve to sharpen, flatten, or neutralize one note throughout the compass of the instrument. Organ Pedals are of two kinds, those forming part of the pedal-clavier by which the performer produces notes of the lower register independently of those on the manual; or combination pedals, by which the arrangement of the registers may be altered. The abbreviation commonly used is Ped.

Pedal Board. Pedalclavier.

Pedalclaviatur. Ger. Pedalclavier of an organ.

Pelléas et Mélisande, Claude Debussy's five-act opera to the text of Maeterlinck's play of the same name, which he cut until Maeterlinck said it was "an incomprehensible version," was first performed at the Paris Opéra Comique, 1902, later performed in Brussels and Frankfort, and on Feb 19, 1908, at the Manhattan Opera House, New York. Golaud, grandson of King Arkel of "Allemonde," while wandering in a forest, meets Mélisande, who wears the garb of a princess, though tattered and torn. Her coronet has fallen into a well, and she is weeping, but she will neither let him recover the coronet, nor tell her name or country. Golaud takes the maiden to the old castle where he lives with Arkel and his mother, Genevieve, and Yniold, his little son, his wife being dead. Six months are supposed to have elapsed when the curtain rises on the next scene. Golaud has made Mélisande his wife and has taken her away, but as Arkel had planned another union, he writes to his half-brother, Pelléas, to obtain Arkel's forgiveness. Genevieve reads the letter to Arkel, it is agreed that the bridal couple shall be received, and the scene shifts to the garden, where Pelléas and Mélisande meet for the first time.

Act II discloses Pelléas and Mélisande in the park. Mélisande, while leaning over the well, drops her wedding ring. Golaud, who has been wounded while hunting, notices the absence of the ring when Mélisande is nursing him, and when she tells him she has lost it in a cave by the sea, tells her to get it at once before the rising tide covers it, and to take Pelléas with her. A moonlight scene at the cave between Pelléas and Mélisande closes the act. The third act reveals Mélisande sitting at her window in a tower and combing her long hair, which falls from the window. Pelléas is kissing this hair when Golaud surprises and separates them. The scene shifts to the vaults of the castle, where, next morning, Golaud takes Pelléas, causes him to note the stagnant water and the smell of the charnel house, then significantly warns him to avoid Mélisande. In the next scene it is night, and from without the castle Golaud holds his little son, Yniold, to Mélisande's window. The child tells him that Pelléas is there with Mélisande. The fourth act opens in a room in the castle. Pelléas and Mélisande meet, and he tells her that he is going away, as he often has said before. A moment later Mélisande and Arkel are together, and the old king assures her of his sympathy for her in such dreary surroundings, which he hopes will now be changed for the better. Golaud enters, hurls invectives at his wife, then remarks that her long hair is good for something, and seizing her by it, throws her to her knees and swings her to and fro. The scene shifts to the terrace where Yniold has been playing. The child forgets a lost toy in the interest which a flock of sheep awaken. Again the scene changes. Pelléas, who has been meditating, is interrupted by Mélisande. He continues to tell her that he must go away, but stops suddenly, kisses her, and tells her that he loves her. She replies that she loves him, and, although aware that Golaud is coming, they embrace. Then Golaud strikes his brother dead, and Mélisande flies in terror. The fifth act takes place in Mélisande's room in the castle. Golaud and a physician watch over her and the physician tells Golaud that "she will surely live." As Mélisande regains consciousness, Golaud is left alone with her. He asks if she loved Pelléas, and if they were guilty. She replies that she loved him, but that they were not guilty, and Golaud is tortured with doubt. They bring Mélisande the child that has been born in her delirium, but she is dead, and Golaud is weeping as the curtain descends. Recurrent themes which he calls "sound wraiths," to the number of 25, are noted in Lawrence Gilman's book on the opera, but the composer declares that melody is "almost anti-lyric, and powerless to express constant change of emotion or of life," and adds, "I have wished to dispense with parasitic musical phrases." The cast of the Manhattan Opera House performance, which follows, includes four artists who took part in the Opéra Comique version, 1902: Mélisande, Miss Mary Garden; Genevieve, Mme. Gerville-Réache; Little Yniold, Miss Sigrist; Pelléas, Jean Perier; Golaud, Hector Dufranne; Arkel, Vittorio Arimondi; The Doctor, Mr. Crabbe.

Son of a Lutheran clergyman, Pepusch studied theory under Klingenberg at Stettin, and organ with Grosse, and at 14 obtained a court appointment. This he resigned on seeing an officer beheaded without trial by his master's orders, settled in London after a year's sojourn in Holland, obtaining employment at Drury Lane, where he aided in staging Italian operas. Pergetti (Signor) composed the opera "Ciglio"; said to have been the last castrato to sing in England, where he appeared at a concert in 1844.

Pergola, so called from the street on which it is located in Florence, is among the most famous of Italian opera houses. The present building, which accommodates 2500 spectators, and is among the best appointed in the world, was erected, 1738, on the site of the earlier structure of wood where Dafne, by PERI and CACCINI, was performed, 1597.

Pergolesi (Giovanni Battista) composed the comic opera "La Serva Padrona," Naples, 1731, which became popular in Paris and elsewhere; a Stabat Mater, which Bellini described as "a divine poem of grief"; is still venerated in Italy as a composer whose death at 26 deprived the world of many masterpieces. Pupil at first of Santoni, a musician of Jesi, Pergolesi had some violin lessons from F. Mondini, and at 16 entered the Naples Conservatorio dei Poveri di Gesu Cristo, where he studied with Greco, Durante, and possibly with Feo. The sacred drama "La Conversione di San Guglielmo d' Aquitania" was performed with the comic intermezzo "Il Maestro di Musica," 1731, by his fellow-students, at the monastery of St. Agnello Maggiore, and so favourably received that he was commissioned to compose the opera "La Sallustia" and the intermezzo "Nerino e Nibbia" or "Amor fa l'uomo cieco" for the Naples court theatre. The opera was a success, the comic piece a failure, and his next works, the opera "Ricimero" and the intermezzo "Il Geloso Schernito," likewise fell flat. Pergolesi, who was then under the patronage of Prince Stigliano, then composed 36 sonatas for two violins and bass and a mass with double choir for the city of Naples, after the earthquake of 1731. The mass greatly extended his reputation, but he again returned to dramatic work, and during the next two years produced the opera "Il Prigionier Superbo" and the comic opera "Lo frate innamorato" and his masterpiece in comedy, "Serva Padrona." In 1734 he entered the service of the Duke of Madaloni and visited Rome with his patron. The opera "Adriano in Siria," composed at this time, proved a failure, but he again succeeded with the intermezzo "Livietto e Tracollo." Tradition which has not been verified assigns him the place of chapelmaster at the Casa Santa of Loretto at this time, but it is certain that he was deeply interested in church music, although leading a dissolute life, and that in 1735, when his comic opera "Il Flaminio" was produced at Naples, he was organist in the Chapel Royal. In 1735 "L'Olimpiade" was produced under the composer's own direction in Rome. Although subsequently recognized as one of his best works, the Roman public rejected the work, while Duni's "Nerone" was applauded. A year later he died of consumption. His church works include, besides those already named, three masses, five settings of the Salve Regina, four Misereres, a number of psalms and motets, and, besides a symphony, harpsichord lessons, etc., he was accredited with 12 cantatas. See biographies by Blasis, 1818; Villarsa, 1831; Faustini-Fasini, Ricordi, 1900. B. Jesi, Ancona, Jan. 3, 1710; d. Mar. 17, 1736, Pozzuoli.

Peri (Jacopo) composed the opera "Dafne," to book by Rinnuccini, performed, 1597, at the Palazzo Corsi, Florence, which is regarded as the first serious opera, and was based upon what was assumed to be the "stile rappresentativo" of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides; the opera "Euridice," also to book by Rinnuccini, for the marriage of Henry IV of France to Maria de' Medici, 1600. Of noble birth, called "Il Zazzerino" because of the luxuriant growth of his golden hair, Peri studied music with Cristoforo Malvezzi, and was soon chapelmaster to the Duke Fernando of Tuscany, an appointment he later held under Cosmo II. Married to an heiress of the noble house of Fortini, he was the intimate of Giovanni Bardi, Count of Vernio, of Rinnuccini, Strozzi, Corsi, and of Galileo Galilei, who became his son's tutor. All Italy was then devoted to the study of Greek art, and the manner of interpreting the old Greek tragedies was doubtless discussed by all the gentlemen named at their reunions in the Bardi Palace. Galilei and Corsi were first to attempt cantatas in the new monodic style, and then Peri is supposed to have undertaken "Dafne" at the suggestion of Corsi and Rinnuccini. Peri himself played Orfeo at the first performance, which took place before a small assemblage of friends at Corsi's house, Corsi himself playing harpsichord. In 1601 Peri became chapelmaster to the Duke of Ferrara, and is no longer heard of in history, save as the author of a publication for one, two, and three voices, Florence, 1609. Of "Dafne" only a few contributions by Caccini survive, but "Euridice" passed through two editions, 1600 and 1608, both of which are very rare. B. Florence, Aug. 20, 1561; d. 1633.

Perrin (Pierre) managed the ACADEMIE DE MUSIQUE, 1669 until 1672, when Louis XIV transferred the patent to LULLI. Philadelphia Operatic Society was founded in 1906-7 for the study and presentation of grand operas by local musicians and singers. John Curtis was elected as president of the association, which in 1908 had a membership of more than 500, and S. Behrens conductor. "Faust" was given in the spring of 1907 in the Academy of Music to an audience which completely filled the house, and "Aïda" was then put in rehearsal. At performances on Nov. 7 and Nov. 12, the casts were: Aïda, Mildred Faas, Isabel Buchanan; Amneris, Clara Yocum-Joyce, Virginia Bisler; High Priestess, Edna L. Crider, Elizabeth D. Nash; Rhadames, Charles W. Tamme, Frederic C. Fremantle; Ramfis, Henri G. Scott, Frederic Ayres; Amonasro, George Russell Strauss, W. Preston Tyler; King, Lewis J. Howell, T. Foster Why; Messenger, John H. Cromie, Jr., John P. Morris. Seats for these performances were sold by subscription. Then the society put "Martha," "Lohengrin," and "The Huguenots" in rehearsal, and planned to give "Faust," "Aïda," "Martha," "Lohengrin," and "The Huguenots" in 1908-9. The orchestra consisted of 80 members of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Philadelphia Orchestra had completed its eighth season in 1908, having been formed for the purpose of giving symphony concerts in that city. F. Scheel was the conductor for a time, but in 1907 Carl POHLIG became conductor. The difficulty of maintaining an orchestra of symphonic proportions was increased, because of the geographical position of the city, which makes it in a way dependent upon New York, or easy of invasion from New York, and by reason of the facts that a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as well as the occasional performances by the opera company from the Metropolitan Opera House had long been established features of the winter season. The orchestra, however, returned the compliment by giving concerts in New York City, although a season in Boston has not been undertaken thus far. The Philadelphia Orchestra Association, which guarantees the expenses, had for its officers in 1908, Alex Van Rensselaer, president; Thomas McKean, vice-president; Andrew Wheeler, Jr., secretary; Arthur E. Newbold, treasurer. Opera performances were given at the Academy of Music, but the rival Hammerstein Opera House was expected to open for the season of 1908-9.

Philémon et Baucis. Charles F. Gounod's three-act opéra comique, to book by Barbier and Carré, was first performed Feb. 18, 1860, at the Paris Théâtre Lyrique. As revised for the Opéra Comique it was reduced to two acts. Jupiter and Vulcan have descended to punish the Phrygians for their impiety, reported in Olympus by Mercury; and they take shelter in the cottage of Philémon and Baucis, an aged couple whose evident happiness delights the gods. At supper Jupiter's milk turns to wine, and Philémon and Baucis, thus aware that they are in the presence of the god, are overcome with awe. Their fears are calmed, however, and when Jupiter has promised to grant Baucis whatever she may wish, she asks that youth may be restored herself and husband. Jupiter thereupon throws them into a profound slumber. An intermezzo follows in which the Phrygians are seen at their orgies. When Vulcan remonstrates, they jeer at him, and then Jupiter visits them with a terrible storm. The old couple awaken in a palace instead of the familiar cottage, but Philémon's rage at the amorous designs of Jupiter against the lovely Baucis causes him to curse the god and leave his home. The faithful Baucis, overcome with grief, begs the god to grant her a second wish, which he does on condition that she will yield to his wishes. Baucis wishes that she may be old again, Philémon joins in her prayer, and touched by so much devotion, Jupiter returns to Olympus, leaving them to their happiness and youth. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Du repos voici l'heure," Philémon and Baucis; "Étrangeres sur ces bords," Philémon, Jupiter, and Vulcan; "Au bruit des lourdes marteaux," Vulcan; "Eh, quoi parceque Mercure," Jupiter; "Ah! si je redeviens belle," Baucis; Act II: "Que m'importent de vaines scrupules?" Jupiter, "Orionate nature," Baucis; "Ne crains pas que j'oublie," Jupiter and Baucis; quartet finale.

Philidor (Jean) was the founder of the celebrated family of French musicians who bore the name, which is said to have been conferred upon his brother Michael, a cremorne player, by Louis XIII, who compared him to the famous oboist Filidori. The family name of the brothers was Danican. Michael, a native of Dauphine, who died without children, continued to be called Danican, but the sons of the other brother assumed the name of Philidor. April 11, 1681, Paris; son of ANDRÉ "L'AINÉ"; d. Oct. 8, 1728, Paris. François André Danican distinguished himself equally in the art of music and the game of chess. Pupil in harmony of CAMPRA, he became famous as a chess player in London, where he published his "Analyse du jeu des échecs" in 1749, and won three games against the most skillful members of the London Chess Club, played simultaneously and without seeing the boards. Recalled to France by Diderot and other friends, 1754, he composed the motet "Lauda Jerusalem" hoping to obtain the appointment of Surintendant de la musique du roi, but failing in this, devoted himself to "Blais le Savetier," an opéra comique which proved a complete success, 1759, and following this with a long series of works of which the most notable were "Le Sorcier," "Tom Jones," 1765, the latter containing a famous unaccompanied quartet, "Le Marechal," which contained the first "air descriptif"; "Le Diable à quatre," which had 200 performances, and the grand opera "Ernelinde," generally considered his best work, produced Nov. 24, 1767, at the Paris Opéra, later as "Sandomir." In 1792, having retained an almost unrivalled degree of popularity in the French theatres during many years, he obtained permission to fulfil a chess engagement in England, but was classed as an emigré, and died before his family was able to have his name removed from the proscribed list. See biography by Allen, Philadelphia, 1863. B. Sept. 7, 1726, Dreux; son of ANDRÉ "L'AINÉ"; d. Aug. 31, 1795, London.

B. 1833, Stratford-on-Avon, Eng.; d. Oct. 3, 1882, Carlsbad.

Philips (Peter) composed madrigals, first publication as "Melodia Olympica," etc., Antwerp, 1591, Cantiones Sacrae, PHALESE, Antwerp, 1613, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; motets, some of the earliest of organ fugues; became organist of the Chapel Royal at Brussels, where he is supposed to have taken up residence to avoid persecution because of his adherence to the Roman Catholic faith in England; became canon of Soignies, and later of Bethune, and chaplain at the court of Archduke Albert, governor of the Netherlands, and chaplain of St. Germain, Tirlement. In recent times there has been a revival of Phillips's music by the choir of Westminster Cathedral, and much of his work has been lithographed for present use. B. England; d. after 1633.

Phonascus. L. Word of Greek origin applied to teachers of declamation and singing.

Phonograph. Thomas A. Edison's improvement of the "graphophone," invented by Taintor of Baltimore, is of musical interest as the type of several instruments by which articulate sound may be registered and afterwards reproduced. A cylinder coated with wax is made to revolve at an even degree of speed either by clock-work or a small electrical battery. A fine steel point or needle attached to a diaphragm, which in turn is attached to a speaking trumpet or horn, is brought in contact with the cylinder, upon which it records in fine spiral lines the vibrations of sound gathered by the horn. The sounds are reproduced by again setting the cylinder in motion and permitting the needle to follow the path it has already marked out, on which the same vibrations it had previously recorded are set up in the horn, and the speech, melody, or harmony accurately reproduced. Sometimes called a "talking machine" because of its power of reproducing human speech, the Phonograph has likewise served to record for future generations the voices of the world's greatest singers. The records were made on the instrument first exhibited in 1877 on tinfoil. Permanent records were made on a hard composition in 1908, although wax was still employed for temporary records. Disks often replace cylinders as "records."

Piano or Pianoforte has become the most important of modern instruments of music except the organ, to which only it is second as a means of obtaining orchestral effect; possesses a chromatic scale of from "A to a'" and sometimes an additional octave, and is made in a great variety of forms. Its principle is that of the dulcimer, that is to say, it consists of strings stretched across a frame attached to a sounding board and struck by hammers, but instead of the hammers being held in the hand, they are set in motion by mechanism operated from a keyboard, and called the Action. The instrument as built to-day is the product of centuries of evolution. The earlier stringed keyboard instruments, the Clavichord and Harpsichord, both capable of exquisite effects in the hands of competent performers, but operated not by hammer but by plectra and tangents, had reached nearly to perfection when, about 1709, Bartolommeo CRISTOFORI, a Florentine harpsichord maker, invented what he called a "Gravecembalo col Piano e Forte" (harpsichord with soft and loud), the first Piano. An instrument of Cristofori's, dated 1720, may be seen at the Metropolitan Museum, New York. Another, dated 1726, is preserved in the Kraus Collection, Florence. In 1716 Marius, a French harpsichord-maker, perfected what he called a "Clavecin à Malletiers" (harpsichord with hammers), and between 1716 and 1721 Schroeter, a German organist, claimed to have devised two hammer-actions. Neither, however, were as perfect mechanically as the earliest instruments of Cristofori. Silbermann made pianos or "Hammerclaviers" for Frederick the Great about 1746, which may still be seen at Potsdam, modelled after Cristofori. Stein of Augsburg, 1777, invented a hopper escapement; Sebastian ERARD, Paris, 1808, invented the "double escapement"; Alpheus Babcock, Boston, 1825, invented the single piece cast iron frame; Jonas CHICKERING, Boston, 1840, improved this single piece frame by including in it the Pin Bridge and Damper Socket Rail, and STEINWAY & Sons, New York, 1859, produced a single piece cast frame with a double overstrung scale. The importance of these frames will be understood when it is stated that the tension of strings in a modern Piano varies between 24,000 and 40,000 pounds. A score of makers have devoted time toward the perfection of the action. The universal popularity of the Piano as a household instrument has made it so familiar that a detailed description of the mechanism may be safely omitted. It will suffice to add that piano manufacturers are quick to adopt each other's improvements, and where they are protected by patent, to adapt them, so that as between a dozen or so of instruments by modern makers in various parts of the world, sold at the same price, the layman will detect but little difference. The preference for this or the other make expressed by visiting virtuosi may be wholly ignored, since they sign testimonials for whatever manufacturer they may be employed by for the time being, and it sometimes happens that such testimonials from the same artist are held by three or four different manufacturers.

Pianograph. Machine invented by Guerin for recording music as it is performed on the piano.

Pianola. E. S. Votey's invention, New York, 1897, consists of a pneumatic mechanism by means of which notes cut in a roll of paper may be played on the piano. The power of the tone, the speed, and, since the invention of secondary attachments, the melody may be controlled by the performer. The Pianola may be either a detachable part or built within the case of an upright piano which may then be adjusted by levers for either Pianola or manual playing. The air pressure is obtained by treddles in either case. In 1908 there were several varieties of mechanical piano players on the market constructed on the Pianola principle. The perforated sheets then included thousands of compositions ranging from Beethoven's symphonies to the latest "ragtime" coon songs. It may be observed that while these instruments have opened the world of music to a multitude of people who have lacked opportunities for acquiring piano technique, even though "readings" by various celebrities are carefully observed by the performer, the delicate shades of expression, which are the soul of music, can be produced by musicians only.

Piano Organ. Variety of BARREL organ.

Piano Score. Vocal or orchestral music arranged for the piano.

Piano Violin. H. C. Baudet's invention, Paris, 1865, by which tones resembling in Timbre those of the violin were obtained from a keyboard instrument, was based on the principle of the hurdy-gurdy. As in the piano, there were wire strings to each note, arranged as in an upright, and to each string, near its nodal point, was affixed a stiff piece of catgut. A revolving roller set up a vibration in the catgut by which it was communicated to the string. This instrument, which bore the above title in England, was known in France as the Piano Quatuor. As early as 1610, Hans Haydn, of Nuremberg, invented a "Geigenwerk" which was an attempt to obtain violin tone from a keyboard instrument, and numerous inventions were announced in intervening years.

Piatti. It. CYMBALS.

Pibcorn. Small Welsh pipe.

Pibroch. Martial bagpipe music of the Scotch Highlands, usually consisting of an air twice played, then followed by variations.

Piccinni (Niccola) rivalled Gluck in popular favor as a composer of opera in Paris; composed "La Cecchina," Rome, 1760, which became the world's favourite opera buffa; "I viaggiatori," 1774, which attained almost equal success, and in all 133 dramatic works; three oratorios, a mass, and other church music. Son of a church musician, by the advice of the Bishop of Bari, he was placed in the Naples Conservatory of San Onofrio at 14, became the pupil of Leo and Durante and after 12 years' study produced his first comic opera "Le Donne dispettose," Naples, 1755. It was remarkably successful, and led to the production of his "Le Gelosie," and "Il Curioso del proprio danno," and the serious operas, "Alessandro nell'Indie" and "Zenobia." In 1856 he married his pupil, Vincenza Sibilla, who was gifted with beauty and an excellent voice, although Piccinni would not permit her to sing in opera. After the great furore caused in Rome by his "La Cecchina," he composed a setting of "L'Olimpiade" and half a dozen other works, but was driven from the Roman stage by Anfossi, his former pupil. Serious illness followed this defeat, but the following year the favourable reception accorded his "I viaggiatori" in Naples restored his confidence in his powers, and in 1776 he accepted an offer of 6000 francs per annum and his expenses from Paris. "Roland," 1778, was his first French opera. During the semi-political disputes between the Glucks and the Piccinnists, Piccinni kept out of sight as much as possible. His genuine admiration of Gluck was proved by an unsuccessful attempt after that composer's death to raise funds for a monument to his memory. However, the war kept up, especially when Piccinni was made director of an Italian company, and thus had an opportunity of presenting the best of his earlier works. Finally the management of the Opéra ordered operas from both Piccinni and Gluck on "Iphigene en Tauride." Gluck's work was first produced with complete success, and when Piccinni's work had its first performance, Jan. 23, 1781, although it received 17 consecutive performances, it became known as "Iphigene en Champagne," from the fact that Mlle. Laguerre, who sang the title rôle, had been tipsy. Piccinni's next successful work was "Didon," Oct. 16, 1783, performed 250 times up to 1826, when it was shelved. This came out after Gluck's departure from Paris, when Sacchini headed the opposition. When Sacchini died, Piccinni, in no wise embittered by the rivalry between them, pronounced a eulogy at his funeral. On the failure of his serious opera, "Clytemnestra," just on the eve of the French Revolution, Piccinni retired to Naples, where he was given a court appointment, produced the oratorio "Jonathan" and the comic opera "La Serva onorata." Suspected of favouring the revolutionary party, he withdrew to Venice, where he produced two operas, then returning to Naples, was cast into prison as a political suspect, where he remained four years. In 1798 he returned to Paris, was highly honoured at the Conservatoire, and presented with 5000 francs. A small pension was granted him, but the finances of the government were uncertain, and Piccinni was reduced to want. He suffered a paralytic stroke. When recovered, he was made an inspector at the Conservatoire, but died a few months later. Beyond giving greater length and variety to the duet and more importance to the finale, Piccinni exerted no influence upon opera. Besides the works named, those of chief importance were: "Il Rè pastore," 1760; "Le fait meprise," 1779; "Atys," 1780; "Le dormeur éveillé" and "Le faux Lord," 1783. B. Pipe. Probably the earliest form of musical instrument, and of prehistoric origin, the pipe has been found in various forms in every part of the world. The modern organ is merely an assemblage of pipes of different materials, lengths, and construction; all woodwind and brass instruments are but improvements on the whistles which are still a favourite toy with children. The Science of ACOUSTICS is largely interested in the study of tone production from pipes, and the wide variety of effects obtainable from open, stopped, conical, cylindrical pipes, and those in which the vibration is set up by double or single reeds, by the vibration of the lips in a mouthpiece, or the air impinging on a lip in flue pipe.

Piston. Attachment for bringing the crooks of CORNETS and other instruments into play when depressed by the fingers.

Pitch. Sounds are either high or low as the vibrations by which they are produced are higher or lower in number. The system of octave nomenclature now generally employed and used in this book is explained under the caption C, and is based upon French or International pitch, adopted by law in France, 1859, and at the Vienna Congress, 1857. This pitch, now universally adopted, except in England, gives a' 435 double vibrations per second, or c' 522 double vibrations. The Philosophical pitch used in some text-books gives a'

427 double vibrations per second. The London Philharmonic Society pitch, adopted 1896, gives a' 439. This pitch was arrived at after noting that the Diapason Normal known as French or International Pitch calculated its a' 435 at 15 degrees Cent. or 59 degrees Fahrenheit, while the temperature of the concert room is usually about 68 degrees Fahrenheit, causing a rise in the pitch of wind instruments. The pitch of the Classical period, also known as Mean pitch was a' between 415 and 429 double vibrations. Then the desire of instrument makers to increase the brilliancy of tone brought pitch to a' 454.7, which was employed at the London Philharmonic concerts of 1874, and is known as Maximum pitch. Handel's tuning fork, which gives a' 422.5, may be taken as the 18th century compromise between the Chorton, which was the church pitch, and the Kammerton, which was about a tone higher. The Stuttgart pitch, a' 440, recommended by a Congress of Physicists in Stuttgart, 1834, never came into general use.

Pitch Pipe. Pipe with movable stopper for announcing the pitch. Several varieties are made, including one with an adjustable reed, but none is equal in accuracy to a set of tuning forks.

Pittsburgh Orchestra was established, 1896, by the Art Society of Pittsburgh. There was formed from among the directors of the Art Society an "Orchestral Committee" which controlled the affairs of the orchestra during its 12 years' existence. The orchestra was "permanent," the musicians being engaged for the season under contract to give it their entire time. During the first four seasons 10 pairs of concerts were given in Pittsburgh; during the five following seasons 18 pairs were given; latterly 15 pairs have been given. At the close of the season of 1906-7, 724 concerts had been given, 350 in Pittsburgh, the rest on tour. The first "Orchestra Committee" consisted of Beveridge Webster, chairman, John Caldwell, Thomas C. L. Lazear, W. C. Lyne, and Charles W. Scovel. The first guarantors were D. Herbert Hostetter, H. C. Frick, John B. Jackson, William McConway, William L. Abbott, C. B. Shea, B. Frank Weyman, Reuben Miller, E. M. Ferguson, J. C. Holmes, Thomas C. Jenkins, J. E. Schwartz, C. L. Magee, Robert Pitcairn, Durbin Horne, J. J. Vandergrift, George Westinghouse, Jr., William N. Frew, Joseph Albree, Charles B. McLean, Joseph T. Speer, and Edward A. Woods. The orchestra has had three conductors: Frederick Archer, 1896-98; Victor Herbert, 1898-1904; Emil Paur, 1904-7. Mr. Paur was elected conductor for another term of three years from 1907 to 1910. The sale of season tickets for the season of 1907-8 was the largest in many years. The orchestra committee in 1908 was: J. I. Buchanan, chairman; J. B. Shea, Wm. McConway, Edwin Z. Smith, James H. Park, and Wm. C. Hamilton. Following is a list of guarantors for the seasons 1907-10. Each guarantor assumed $1000 yearly for the three years, thus making a reserve fund of $44,000 each year out of which any deficit may be paid: Louis T. Brown, J. I. Buchanan, Dallas C. Buyers, Harmar D. Denny, Dispatch Publishing Company, Herbert Du Puy, John Eaton, J. B. Finley, William Flinn, W. N. Frew, J. M. Guffey, Robert C. Hall, S. Hamilton, H. J. Heinz, D. Snyder, D. T. Watson, George Westinghouse, B. F. Weyman, Edward A. Woods, and Charles H. Zug. All the concerts in the regular "home series" were given in Carnegie Music Hall. In 1908, however, an innovation was made and the afternoon concerts held in Exposition Music Hall. This made possible an attendance from a larger area of population. During the last two seasons occasional evening concerts were given down town at popular prices. Saturday evening concerts were added for those weeks when a regular pair of concerts was not given.

Più. It. More.

Pius X deserves a place in this work because of his important decree requiring the restoration of the Gregorian Song in the services of the Roman Catholic Church, and the appointment of a Papal Commission, 1904, to prepare a new Official Edition of liturgical music; sweeping reforms which mean greater dignity and solemnity to the services of the church hereafter. Grandson of a soldier in the Papal army, until elevated to the papacy, his whole life was spent in Northern Italy. He studied at Treviso and Padua, was ordained to the priesthood in 1858, and in 1875 was made chancellor of his diocese and vicar capitular. In 1884 he was nominated bishop of Mantua by Pope Leo XIII, and in 1893 became Cardinal and Patriarch of Venice. The Italian government claimed the right, as successors of the Venetian Republic, to nominate the patriarch, but protests were not availing, and Giuseppe, Cardinal Sarto, was soon so popular with the Venetians that the opposition of the government was withdrawn. Aug. 4, 1903, after six fruitless ballots in the Sacred College, he was chosen as Supreme Pontiff in succession to Leo XIII, and took the name of Pius in token of his determination to maintain the policy of his predecessors toward the Italian government. His Holiness has always been a patron of the arts, and among his protégés was Don Lorenzo PEROSI, the priest and composer. B. Ries in Treviso, 1835; add. Rome.

Plain Chant. PLAIN-SONG.

Plain Song is the unisonous, unmeasured music which has been employed in the ritual of the Christian church since the earliest times, and, according to modern theories, is derived from that traditional music of the Jewish people which was used in the liturgy of the Temple at Jerusalem until its destruction. The similarity of the chants still employed in the synagogues with those brought together in the great AMBROSIAN and GREGORIAN collections strengthens this theory, but aside from historic interest, Plain-Song has again become a vital study of the musicians of the Roman Catholic and Anglican churches; for in the one, a reformation authorized by the Pope is being carried on by the Order of St. Benedict, and in the other, for the past half century, there has been a tendency to return to the ritualistic music preserved, notably in the Sarum service books; in other words, the Gregorian music as introduced into England by St. Augustine. If it be assumed that Plain Song has been handed down through the Jewish-Christian congregations of Apostolic days and that it was of Templar origin, then it has served for the musical expression of man's most sacred feelings for nearly 3000 years. It is certain that in the time of St. Basil of Neo Cesarea, 363 A. D., the custom "of singing psalms together" was general, not only in the Church of Antioch, but throughout Asia and Africa, for when St. Basil was accused of using his power as bishop to introduce music as a new device in the service of God, he testified to the facts. A Jewish origin for the bulk of the earlier collections of Plain-Song might likewise account for the peculiarity of the church MODES in adhering to the Diatonic Genera of Greek Music to the exclusion of the Chromatic and Enharmonic Genera which completed their system. The earliest versions of Plain-Song melodies, though noted with Neumes and Accents, were necessarily handed down from generation to generation of churchmen, with the additional safeguard of tradition. The form had reached its highest perfection before the close of the 14th century, and the energies of churchmen to-day are being devoted to the restoration of this music as it was prior to the corruptions of the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries. The Benedictines of Stanbrook have published a "Grammar of Plain-Song." For deeper study see the "Paleographie Musicale," issued by the Benedictines of Solesmes, "The Elements of Plain-Song," by the Plain Song Society; "Einführung in die Gregorianische Melodien," Dr. Wagner, Eng. trans. of Part I; the works of Gerbert, de Coussemaker, and Abbé Migne, and especially the works of Dom Joseph POTHIER, O.S.B.

Later he proposes marriage to Mme. de la Tour, but, being afraid to commit bigamy, arranges with Boudon, the chorus leader, to assume the rôle of priest. The Marquis, who has overheard St. Phar's plans, reveals them to Mme. de la Tour, who thereupon substitutes a real priest for Boudon. The Marquis thereupon lays an information against St. Phar, who is informed that he has actually committed bigamy, and expects to be hanged for his crime. Programme or Program. List of works to be performed.

Programme Music is that which professes to give a definite description of moods or events. There is an unfortunate tendency on the part of all commentators to enlarge upon whatever suggestion the creator of a work has given of its inner meaning, whether in music, painting, or statuary, to progress from the subjective to the objective, from the abstract to the concrete. Realizing that this tendency is due the lack of appreciation and understanding of absolute music by the multitude, certain modern composers have endeavored to manufacture music of descriptive intensity equal that of the printed word, to embody street noises and the cries of the nursery in the larger symphonic form. Under the caption PASTORAL SYMPHONY will be found some account of the highest type of Programme Music, and of the absurdities to which it led, despite the plainly expressed purpose of the composer.

Progression. Motion from note to note or from chord to chord.

Prophète. Giacomo Meyerbeer's five-act opera, to book by Scribe, was first performed April 16, 1849, at the Paris Opéra. The story, laid in Holland, 1534, follows historical lines more closely than is usually the case in opera. John of Leyden is to be married to Bertha, an orphan girl who is vassal to Count Oberthal. The first act reveals John and his mother, Fides, at Dordrecht, at a time when the Anabaptists are inciting the peasants to attack Oberthal's castle. Oberthal recognized in Giona one of the three Anabaptist leaders, a former servant, discharged for thieving, and denounces him to the mob, which speedily loses its enthusiasm. Bertha and Fides ask Oberthal's consent to the girl's marriage, but he is struck with her beauty, and has her dragged into his castle, with Fides, as her attendant. The next act takes place at Leyden. The Anabaptists come to the inn kept by John and his mother, are impressed with John's resemblance to the picture of David in Münster Cathedral, and on learning that he is brave, a visionary with some knowledge of Scriptures, hail him as their leader. John prefers to keep his inn and looks forward to a happy marriage with Bertha. His betrothed, meantime, has escaped from Oberthal, found her way to the inn, and is placed in hiding, while Oberthal and his soldiers, who have hastened in pursuit, enter, and threaten that, unless John gives up the girl, his mother shall be killed. John in his agony surrenders Bertha. Again the Anabaptists offer to make him their leader, and this time, John, who has visions of revenge, accepts. The third act represents the camp of the Anabaptists, near Münster. Skaters come across a frozen lake, bring food, and a charming ballet ensues. Oberthal is taken prisoner, but on learning that Bertha has escaped dishonour and is in Münster, John determines that his prisoner shall be held until Bertha herself can pass judgment upon him, then leads a successful assault on the city. The fourth act takes place in Münster, now ruled by the Anabaptists. Bertha, disguised as a pilgrim, meets Fides, attired as a beggar. Fides believes that John has been murdered by the Prophet, not knowing that her son is the Prophet himself, and Bertha swears to kill the Prophet to avenge John. The scene shifts to the Cathedral, where John is to be crowned Emperor of Germany. As the coronation procession marches by, Fides recognizes John, and calls to him. The leaders of the Anabaptists tell him if he acknowledges his mother, they will kill her, and to save her, he declares she is insane. Fides is then led off to prison. The last act takes place in the Prison of Münster. The three Anabaptists have heard that the imperial forces are closing in upon Münster, and agree to buy their safety by sacrificing their puppet, who has just been crowned, to the true Emperor. Fides is brought in, and John comes to beg her forgiveness. This she readily grants, but demands that he renounce his power. An officer who is faithful to John informs him the city has been betrayed to the enemy, and brings in Bertha, who is charged with having attempted to fire the palace. On recognizing in her lover the bloodthirsty Prophet who has ravaged the country, Bertha is overcome with horror, and kills herself. John sends his mother to a place of safety, and prepares to die with his enemies. The scene changes to the Banquet Hall. As the three Anabaptists rush in, leading the hostile troops in order to imprison John, he fires a mine which blows up the palace, and all die together. At the last moment, Fides enters, to forgive, then perishes with her son. The original cast included Mme. Viardot Garcia as Fides, con., and Roger, as the Prophet, ten. The great aria for Fides, "Ah! mon fils" or "O figlio mio," occurs in the second act. The ballet, the famous Coronation March, and the Prophet's drinking song, "Bevian e intormo," are among the Meyerbeer pieces most often heard in concert.

Proportion. The relation of numbers to each other, not only in the matter of intervals, but also as a means of determining the length of notes, was an important subject with mediæval theorists, who interlarded their works with such pretty words as Triplասuperbipartiensquintas to express the ratio 17.5, and Subtripლասuperbipartiensquintas to express the ratio 4.15. Modern music is so far from being a branch of applied mathematics that only in matters of Scale and Temperament is there occasion to call in the services of the professed mathematician.

Puccini (Giacomo) composed the operas "MANON LESCAUT," "La BOHÈME," "La TOSCA," "MADAME BUTTERFLY"; ranked with the most popular and gifted of the "Young Italian" school. Son of MICHELE Puccini, he received his first musical instruction from Angeloni in his native city, Lucca; and then entered the Milan Conservatory as a pensioner of Queen Margherita of Italy, where he studied under A. Ponchielli. His Sinfonia-Capriccio for orchestra was so well received that Ponchielli suggested he try "Le VILLI," for which Fontana had written a libretto. This was performed May 31, 1884, at the Teatro dal Verme, Milan, and after revision and elaboration into two acts, at La Scala, Jan. 24, 1885. His "Edgar," likewise to book by Fontana, and based on de Musset's "La Coupe et les Lèvres," was first performed, April 21, 1889, at La Scala, but proved a failure. Then followed the highly successful works mentioned at the beginning of this article. In 1907 Puccini visited the United States to aid in the production of his "Manon Lescaut" at the Metropolitan Opera House, and while there visited the theatres in the hope of finding some suitable American subject for an opera. His choice fell on "The Girl of the Golden West." A libretto was provided on this subject by Zangarini, and in the spring of 1908 Puccini had begun work, promising to complete it for the season of 1908-9. B. June 22, 1858, Lucca; add. "THE ELDER." D. July 31, 1682. Daniel composed music to plays by Cibber, D'Urfey, Farquhar, etc., six anthems, six cantatas, sonatas for flute and violin, organ and harpsichord settings of the Psalms; played organ. B. about 1660; youngest son of HENRY, "THE ELDER"; d. 1717, London.

Purcell (Henry) composed the opera "Dioclesian," adapted by Betterton from Beaumont and Fletcher's "Prophetess," music to some 35 plays, much incidental music published (Posth.), 1697, as "a collection of Ayres Composed for the Theatre and upon other Occasions," church music; ranked as the greatest of composers of English birth. Son of Henry Purcell, "the Elder," who died while he was still a child, he became a chorister in the Eng. Chapel Royal, and when his voice broke, studied organ and composition with John Blow. For 12 years from 1676 he was a copyist at Westminster Abbey, during which time he composed some anthems, a song published, 1677, in "Playford's Choice Ayres," and an elegy on the death of Matthew Locke, which appeared in the same collection. In 1680 Purcell succeeded his master, Blow, who seems to have been deposed, as organist at Westminster Abbey. "Fantazias" for strings, composed about this time, show the influence of Orlando Gibbons. From this year date the first of his dramatic pieces, music to "Theodosius, and the Virtuous Wife," his Ode to Charles II, "Welcome Vicegerent," and doubtless some church music. In 1682 he succeeded Lowe as organist of the Chapel Royal, and in 1683 published his "Sonnatas of III Parts," two violins and organ or harpsichord, and began to style himself "composer in ordinary to his most Sacred Majesty." "My heart is inditing," one of his best anthems, was probably composed for the coronation of James II. The "Elegy on John Playford," and the birthday ode, "Sound the Trumpets," date from 1687. 1689 was memorable as being the year of Purcell's only serious financial trouble. He had accepted fees for admission to the organ loft of Westminster Abbey at the coronation of William and Mary, and these he was obliged to refund. 1690 saw the performance of "Dioclesian," which was not successful, although the song "What shall I do to show how much I love her" has not yet lost favour. In 1691 he composed "King Arthur" to Dryden's book, and in 1694 the anthem "Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts," for the funeral of Queen Mary. From 1695 date two elegies to the Queen, music for Howard and Dryden's "Indian Queen" and, in all probability, music to Shadwell's operatic version of "The Tempest." Handel, who borrowed many passages from Purcell, as well as his broad treatment of the massed chorus, soon caused the Englishman to be forgotten, his music fell into neglect, and it is not yet possible to give anything like a complete catalogue. Novello published four vols. of "Purcell's Sacred Music." Besides the collection of theatre music above referred to, a number of his songs are contained in "Orpheus Britannicus," in two books, 1697 and 1702. Of songs, duets, trios, and catches, he composed more than 200, and the plays for which he composed incidental music include, in addition to those mentioned, "The Knight of Malta," "The Indian Emperor," "The Fairy Queen," "Aurung-Zebe," "The Fatal Marriage," "Don Quixote," "Timon of Athens," "Oroonoko," etc. B. 1658 or 1659, London; d. Nov. 21, 1695. Edward became organist of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. B. 1689; son of the great HENRY; d. July 1, 1740, London. Edward Henry played organ in London churches; in boyhood, chorister, Eng. Chapel Royal. Son of EDWARD; d. about 1770.

"King Arthur" was sung at the Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Purcell Society was founded in London, 1876, for the purpose of issuing a complete edition of Purcell's compositions. Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, Bart., headed the original committee, and several publications were issued. For a time the movement lost strength, but a new organization was effected in 1887. A 15th volume was issued by the society, 1905. Dr. Sir Hubert H. Parry, Bart., was then at the head of the committee.

Puritani. Vincenzo Bellini's two-act opera, to book by Count Pepoli, was first performed Jan. 25, 1835, at the Paris Théâtres des Italiens. The story is laid in England during the Great Rebellion. Elvira, daughter of Lord Walton, who commands Plymouth for the Puritans, loves Arturo (Lord Arthur Talbot), a young cavalier who served his king. Elvira's hand has been promised Ricardo (Sir Richard Forth) of the Cromwellian forces, but Giorgio (Sir George Walton) brings his niece the glad news that her father has agreed that she shall marry Arturo, and that her lover shall be admitted to the fortress. But the widowed Henrietta Maria, who is in the fortress under sentence of death, is allowed to escape by Arturo, disguised as Elvira. Thinking herself abandoned by Arturo, Elvira becomes insane. Meantime Arturo is proscribed by Parliament and in danger of death. Touched by the appeals of Giorgio, Ricardo agrees that he will induce the Parliamentary leaders to pardon Arturo if he is captured unarmed. He is so captured while explaining his disappearance to Elvira, and is condemned to die on the same day, but the message of his pardon soon restores him and Elvira to happiness. The original cast included: Elvira, Grisi, sop.; Arturo, Rubini, ten.; Ricardo, Tamburini, bass; Giorgio, Lablache, bass. Raff (Joseph Joachim) composed 11 symphonies, a piano concerto and suite for violin and orchestra which are still played, much chamber music, songs, and the operas "König Alfred," "Dame Kobold," "Samson"; ranked with the most prolific composers of the "Romantic School." Practically self-taught, although son of an organist, Raff had won classical honors at a Jesuit school, but was compelled to discontinue his studies from lack of means. In 1843 Mendelssohn, impressed by some manuscripts, introduced him to Breitkopf & Härtel, and he was recognized and assisted later by Liszt and von Bülow. The last-named pianist first brought Raff conspicuously before the public as a composer by playing his "Concertstück" at a Stuttgart concert, and in 1851 Liszt produced his "König Alfred" at Weimar, where it still holds the boards. In 1854 Raff married the actress Doris Genast, and accompanied her to Wiesbaden, where he soon acquired popularity as a piano teacher. "An das Vaterland," his first symphony, won the prize of the "Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde," Vienna, 1863; his "Dame Kobold" was given at Weimar, 1870, and in 1877 he became director of the Frankfort Hoch Conservatory. Rameau (Jean Philippe) discovered the law of the inversion of chords and wrote a valuable series of works on theory; dominated the French opera for many years, ranking as the foremost French composer between the ages of Lulli and Gluck. Son of Jean Rameau, organist of the Dijon Cathedral, the lad was destined for a legal career, but he neglected all studies save that of music, and was thus able to read difficult harpsichord music at sight when only seven, and soon mastered the violin and organ, but was withdrawn from the Jesuit College at the request of the authorities. At eighteen he was sent to Italy to break off a love affair, where he neglected the opportunities afforded for mastering the Italian theories of music, to his deep regret in after life. For a time he played violin with a wandering theatrical company in Southern France, then settled in Paris, where he obtained employment as church organist. Disgusted in 1717 at being defeated in competition for the post of organist at St. Paul's Church, he accepted an appointment temporarily at Lille, and later went to Clermont. There his brother Claude vacated the organ desk at the Cathedral in his favor. During four years in Clermont he tried to make up for his early neglect of study, read the then authoritative works on musical theory, and after experiments with the monochord, wrote his "Treatise on Harmony." This work, although containing erroneous theories which he corrected in after years, marked a decided advance in the world's knowledge. As soon as he could leave his post at Clermont, he went to Paris, published his book, which was soon followed by several controversial works, and a "Dissertation on the different methods of accompaniment for the harpsichord and organ," Paris, 1732. His debut as a dramatic composer was made at the Théâtre de la Foire, Feb. 3, 1723, when he produced the dances, ballets, and airs needed in "L'Endriague," written by his friend Alexis Piron. The following year he published his celebrated "Pièces de Clavecin" with a method for fingering, reprinted later with a "table of agréments." Now recognized as a leading music master, and organist at the Church of Ste. Croix de la Bretonnerie, Rameau married a pretty young singer, Marie Louise Mangot, Feb. 25, 1726. His one-act "L'Enrôlement d'Arlequin" was produced at the Théâtre de la Foire almost before the wedding festivities were over, and a few months later, his "Le Faux Prodiges," like its predecessor, in lighter vein, was first performed at the same house. Having won recognition, Rameau now revealed his ambition to attempt grand opera. After repeatedly failing to secure a libretto, he obtained the tragic text "Samson" from Voltaire (whom he greatly resembled), only to have it forbidden by the authorities just as the Académie was ready to produce it. "Hippolyte et Aricie," to book by Abbé Pellegrin, based on Racine's "Phèdre," was the first of his serious works to obtain a hearing, Oct. 1, 1733. The composer, who had just turned the half century, was discouraged by an unfavorable reception, and thought of withdrawing from the theatre. The tide of sentiment soon turned in his favor. "Les Indes galantes," produced at the Académie, Aug. 23 1735, and "Les Fêtes de Hébé," May 21, 1739, established him in a position which neither the attacks of the "Lullists," who objected to having that master's works superseded, nor of the "Encyclopedists," whose articles on music Rameau ridiculed, could shake. For the remainder of his life he grew in honors and in popularity. He was elected a member of the Académie of his native town, exempted from taxation together with his family for all time, and shortly before his death was raised to the nobility. A list of his later works and the date of their performance at the Académie follows: "Dardanus," Nov. 19, 1739; "Les Fêtes de Polymnie," Oct. 12, 1745; "Le Temple de la Gloire," Dec. 7, 1745; "Zäis," Feb. 28, 1748; "Pygmalion, Aug. 27, 1748; "Les Fêtes de l'Hymen et de l'Amour," Nov. 5, 1748; "Platée," Feb. 4, 1749; "Näis," April 22, 1749; "Zoroastre," Dec. 5, 1749; "La Guirlande, ou les Fleurs enchantée," Sept. 21, 1751; "Acanthée et Cephise," Nov. 18, 1751; "Les Surprises d'Amour," May 31, 1757; "Les Paladins," Feb. 12, 1760. "Pièces de clavecin en concerts avec un violon ou une flûte," and "Nouvelles Suites de Pièces de clavecin" likewise date from this later period, and he composed the following operas for the court: "Lysis et Delie," "Daphnis et Egle," "Les Sybarites," "La Naissance d'Osiris," "Anacréon," and "La Princesse de Navarre," the last named to book by Voltaire. Recitative. With the beginning of opera in Italy, recitative was developed in imitation of the musical declamation of the Greek theatre. Free declamation continued to serve for the ordinary dialogue of opera from the days of Caccini, Peri and Monteverde, melodious set pieces being reserved for the more impassioned utterances, until Wagner's so-called reforms. The ideal of the Bayreuth School, as set forth by its founder is "recitative which is aria and aria which is recitative," with the orchestra aiding in enforcing and illustrating the narrative, instead of serving merely as accompaniment. In view of the development of the modern orchestra this is perhaps the nearest approach to the Aria Parlante of the Italian Renaissance now possible, but it should be remembered that the instruments employed in the Greek Theatre were incapable of giving even what the Zukunftsmusikers were pleased to call "a big guitar accompaniment." In the Recitativo Secco or Parlante of Italian opera, the orchestra sounds only a few chords to enable the singer to hold to the key. The elaborately accompanied recitative was characterized as Stromentato, "instrumented"; Con Accompagnamento, "with accompaniment"; or Obbligato, "where the accompaniment is necessary." In oratorio as in opera, the singer is allowed great freedom in the delivery of Recitative unless tempo is strictly marked.

Reeds are employed to set up vibration in the enclosed air columns of organ pipes, harmoniums, and reed orchestral instruments for the production of musical sounds. Although metal and many fibrous materials are now used in making reeds, the name derived from a tall grass or cane is retained. A thin strip of this cane so inserted in the mouthpiece of a clarinet as to overlap the air passage and vibrate against it, is a type of the Single Beating Reed. The OBOE and Bassoon are provided with Double Reeds, while the metal reeds of the concertina and harmonium, so cut as to pass freely in and out of the aperture in the plate to which they are attached, are examples of Free Reeds. Rienzi. Richard Wagner's five-act tragic opera to his own book, based on Bulwer-Lytton's novel "The Last of the Tribunes," was first performed Oct. 20, 1842, at Dresden. The action is laid in Rome about the middle of the 14th century. In the first act, Orsini, a Roman noble, attempted to abduct Irene, sister of the papal notary, Rienzi. Orsini's enemy

Colonna, leader of a rival faction of the nobility, prevents this, and in the midst of quarrel, Adriano, Colonna's son, who is in love with Irene, comes to her defense. The tumult increases. Nobles and plebeians are attracted to the scene, and finally Rienzi enters. Acting on the suggestion of Cardinal Raimondo, Rienzi inflames the passions of the common people, who rise against the patricians. Adriano is bound to the nobility by blood, to Rienzi by love, and as Rienzi, clad in armour, appears to lead the people, Adriano joins him. The patricians are defeated. From the environs of the Cathedral of St. John Lateran, the next act shifts to the capitol, where the nobles make submission to Rienzi, although, as Adriano informs him, they are already plotting his death. Dances and gladiatorial games are held, but while the festivities are at their height, Orsini strikes at Rienzi with his dagger, only to blunt his weapon against a shirt of mail. The nobles are seized, condemned to death, but at the intercession of Adriano and of Irene, Rienzi spares them on condition that they will swear fidelity. The oath is no sooner taken than broken. Again the people demand the extermination of the patricians, and, led by Rienzi, put them to the sword. Adriano threatens to revenge himself for the death of his father and kindred, and the act ends with the installation of Rienzi as supreme ruler. The fourth act opens with the approach of Rienzi to church at the head of a gay procession. He has lost the confidence of the people because of a report that he has leagued with the emperor to restore power of the Pope. Adriano prepares to assassinate him, but as he hears the churchmen chanting Rienzi's excommunication, his purpose changes, he goes to Irene, and urges her to leave Rome with him, telling her Rienzi's life is no longer safe. Irene's reply is to seek her brother at the capitol, that she may share his danger. She finds him in prayer. When she repeats Adriano's warning, Rienzi advises her to save herself, knowing himself to be doomed. A mob approaches. Rienzi tries to address them, but they will not listen. The capitol is fired, and the mob stone Irene and Rienzi through the windows. Adriano, seeing them about to perish in the flames, throws away his sword and rushes into the building to die with them. The original cast was: Rienzi, Tichatschek, ten.; Irene, Wuest, sop.; Colonna, Dettmer, bass; Adriano, Schröder-Devrient, sop.; Orsini, Wachter, bass. The work is along conventional lines, so much so that in later life Wagner was disposed to regard it as unworthy of him. It contains, in fact, as many concerted numbers as the average Italian work of the period. The overture, which is still heard in concert rooms, is built up of the leading musical numbers of the opera.

Rigoletto. Giuseppe Verdi's three-act opera, to book by Piave, based on Hugo's "Le Roi s'amuse" was first performed Mar. 11, 1851, at La Fenice, Venice. The plot of the drama is faithfully followed, but for political reasons, "Francis I" in the play becomes "Duke of Mantua" in the opera, and "Triboulet, the Jester," "Rigoletto." The opera opens with a fête in the Duke's palace, at which the Duke relates his discovery of a charming maiden he traced to her home, but has not yet obtained access to, as she is visited nightly by an unknown man. The Duke leads off the Countess Ceprano, to the chagrin of her jealous husband, who is mocked by Rigoletto. Ceprano and other courtiers who have felt the bitterness of the hunchback jester's tongue, plot to destroy him, when Count Monterone, whose family has been dishonoured by the Duke, comes in to denounce his ruler. Rigoletto mocks him also, but quails before the awful curse Monterone hurls at him. The scene shifts to the street leading to Rigoletto's home, where he has brought up his daughter Gilda in complete ignorance of the vileness of the court. As he is about to enter his door, the bravo Sparafucile proffers his services, in case Rigoletto has any enemies to be killed. The hunchback thanks the cut-throat, whose weapon he is soon to hire, then entering his home, embraces his daughter. Gilda is the young girl who has struck the fancy of the Duke. He has followed Rigoletto in disguise, manages to introduce himself into the house and woo Gilda as Gaultier Maldé, a poor student, and wins her love. Meantime Rigoletto has joined a party of courtiers who tell him they are about to abduct Countess Ceprano on behalf of the Duke, an enterprise which Rigoletto cordially approves. They lead him back to his own home, meaning in fact, to abduct Gilda, whom they imagine to be Rigoletto's mistress. Having secured their victim, the courtiers steal away, leaving Rigoletto alone. He tears off the mask which has blindfolded him, and swoons on realizing that he has aided in the desecration of his own home. In the second act Rigoletto has returned to the palace, vainly hoping to rescue his daughter from the Duke. The courtiers gibe at him until he is almost mad, and he prepares to force himself into the Duke's presence and revenge himself, when Gilda appears. Though deceived, she still loves the Duke, and intercedes for him. Monterone is escorted through the anteroom in chains, bewailing the futility of his curses against the Duke, but Rigoletto vows to be the means of carrying them into effect. The hunchback has now plotted with Sparafucile to murder the Duke, and the bravo's sister Maddalena has been employed to decoy him to an inn. There the third act opens. Gilda, brought to witness her lover's perfidy before he is slain, still pleads for the Duke's life. The Duke keeps his appointment, and so pleases Maddalena that she begs Sparafucile to spare him. Sparafucile finally agrees, on condition that another victim present himself before midnight. The conversation is overheard by Gilda, who determines to save her false lover, even at the cost of her own life. She is in boy's clothing, prepared for flight by Rigoletto. Boldly knocking at the door, she enters, is stabbed by Sparafucile, who thrusts her body into a sack, and when Rigoletto comes to the door at midnight for his victim, Sparafucile gives him the sack with its burden. Rigoletto drags the sack toward the river. Suddenly the Duke's voice is heard singing in the distance, and filled with amazement, Rigoletto opens the sack. Gilda revives enough to profess her love for the Duke, and to pray for her father, then dies, and Rigoletto falls senseless over her body. The original cast included: The Duke, Mirate, ten.; Rigoletto, Varesi, bar.; Monterone, Damini, bar.; Marullo, Künérth, bar.; Sparafucile, Ponz, Saini, mez.-sop.; Count Ceprano, Bellini, bass; Court Usher, Rizzi, ten.; Gilda, T. Ring of the Nibelungs. Richard Wagner's Tetralogy or cycle of four music dramas to his own text, written in alliterative poetic form, was first produced as a complete work in the newly completed Festspielhaus at BAYREUTH, between Aug. 13 and 16, 1876. "Parsifal" alone excepted, these four music dramas, "Rheingold," "Walküre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung," were regarded by the composer as the most perfect fruit of his genius, and his chief legacy to posterity. In them are most perfectly realized his theories of a dramatic art which should unite music, poetry, action, and declamation. In them he sought to embody the principles of the Greek tragedians, as he understood them; to assemble, coordinate and use as a means of expression, every art which had been under the divine patronage of the Muses, those nine sisters from whose name the word Music is derived. As the Greek tragedians chose their subjects from the mythology of their race, so Wagner desired to depict the gods and goddesses of the Teutonic peoples. As the Greek dramatists found material in the sacred poems of Homer and Hesiod, so Wagner sought his in the Nibelungen Lied, or rather in the Eddas from which they were derived. In 1848, after the completion of "Lohengrin," he wrote a three-act drama, "Siegfried's Tod," but the poetic text of the cyclus was not wholly completed until 1852, nor was the "Ring" ready for performance until the Festspielhaus had provided a suitable stage. Dates of early separate performances of these music dramas will be found in the biographical notice of Wagner. After an orchestral prelude intended to suggest the idea of moving water, the rising curtain discloses the rocky depths of the Rhine. Woglinde, Wellgunde, and Flosshilde, guardians of the Rheingold treasure, amuse themselves with teasing Alberich, pretending in turn to be captivated by his grotesque love-making, then swimming quickly out of his reach. The lustful Alberich is enraged, tries in vain to seize one of the Rhine maidens, but a ray of sunlight illuminates the Rheingold, and when its guardians tell him that this treasure will confer supreme power upon whomsoever, renouncing the delights of love, shall steal it, Alberich tears the treasure from its resting place and disappears in the depths of the stream, laughing mockingly at the lamentations of his tormentors. A transformation is quickly effected. The stage now represents a rocky height from which, in the distance, the walls of Walhalla may be seen. Fricka and Wotan awaken from their sleep, and Wotan's delight at the completion of his dwelling place is somewhat subdued when Fricka reproaches him with his infidelities to her, and with the bargain he has made with Fafner and Fasolt, whereby Freia is to be surrendered to the giants in payment for their services as builders. Freia comes in, terrified, and seeking protection from Wotan. Fafner and Fasolt enter, claiming their reward, but Wotan tries to evade payment. The giants are raging. They had agreed that Fasolt should have Freia, while Fafner would be content with the golden apples in Freia's garden. As they are about to take Freia by force, Froh and Donner confront them, and Donner would kill them with a swing of his hammer, but Wotan interferes, being afraid of the consequences. Loge, on whom Wotan relies for the means of saving Freia, tells of the Ring Alberich has fashioned from the Rheingold, and the power it confers. Gods and giants alike covet the Ring, which can only be obtained by theft, and Fasolt and Fafner agree to accept the Rheingold in lieu of Freia, but depart, taking her with them until she shall be ransomed. Freia's golden apples, which preserve the gods' eternal youth, wither when she goes, and whatever scruples Wotan may have felt regarding the proposed theft are overcome by the necessity of getting Freia back again. A second transformation depicts the caverns of Nibelheim. Mime has just completed a Tarnhelm or wishing cap. Alberich putting it on, has become invisible, beats Mime, and then leaves for the hidden chambers where his slaves are working amid the treasure. Mime is screaming with pain as the gods enter. He tells of his woes, of the tyranny of Alberich, and describes the powers of the Tarnhelm. Alberich, the Tarnhelm in his belt, enters, driving before him a gang of dwarfs laden with treasure. Confident of his power, he mocks at the gods. Loge suggests that while he sleeps some one will steal the treasure. Alberich, with the aid of the Tarnhelm, transforms himself into a mighty serpent, to show how easily he can guard his possessions. Loge pretends amazement, but says that Alberich cannot transform himself to anything as small as a toad. Alberich instantly proves that he can, then Wotan puts his foot on the toad, Loge picks up the Tarnhelm, and Alberich, restored to his natural form, is securely bound and dragged away by the gods. Again the stage settings portray the rocky heights, with Walhalla in the distance. Alberich, forced to ransom himself by giving the Rheingold to the gods, has his dwarfs bring the treasure from Nibelheim; then, deprived of the gold, the Ring and the Tarnhelm, follows them back to the bowels of the earth, cursing treasure and gods alike as he goes. Fasolt and Fafner return with Freia, plant their clubs in front of her, and demand that enough gold be piled up to hide her from their view. Not until the Tarnhelm and the Ring have been added to the heap is Freia completely hidden, and the Ring Wotan refuses to give until warned by Erda that he must. The giants quarrel over the possession of the treasure. Fafner kills Fasolt with a blow of his club, gathers up the treasure in his bag, and marches off. Then Donner swings his hammer, and the clouds which have overhung Walhalla are dissipated. Froh bridges the chasm between Walhalla and the heights with a rainbow, and as the gods prepare to pass over this bridge to take possession of the new home, the Rhine maidens are heard bewailing the loss of their treasure. "Die Walküre." The first act takes place within Hunding's hut, built up about a great tree wherein, in past times, Wotan or the Wanderer, has thrust a sword so deeply that only the hilt is visible. Sieglinde, busied in household duties, is interrupted by the entrance of Siegmund, worn with battle and seeking shelter from the storm. She gives him a horn of mead, and promises hospitality. Hunding, returning from the chase, confirms this promise, but on learning Siegmund is a Vol-sung, tells him they must fight next morning. Alone and weaponless, Siegmund remembers that his father had told him of the sword Nothung (Needful) which one day should be his. Sieglinde, having drugged Hunding, returns, and points out to Siegmund the hilt of Nothung in the tree. With a mighty effort Siegmund plucks it forth. Then brother and sister, twin children of Wotan, determine to escape from Hunding's power. The next act opens with a meeting between Wotan and Brünnhilde, which is interrupted by the entrance of Fricka, who scolds Wotan much as Juno was wont to scold Jupiter for his marital lapses. Fricka demands that Sieglinde and Siegmund die as punishment for their incestuous love, and forces Wotan to swear that die they shall. Brünnhilde returns, Wotan tells the story of the Rheingold and repents of his promise to Fricka; but when Brünnhilde offers to save Siegmund he sternly commands her to destroy him. As Wotan and the Valkyr depart, Siegmund and Sieglinde enter, wholly exhausted, yet knowing Hunding to be close behind them. Reproaching herself for having yielded to her passion, Sieglinde falls into a swoon, and while she is unconscious Brünnhilde comes to summon Siegmund to Walhalla. He refuses to be separated from Sieglinde, and in his extremity is about to kill her that they may be at least united in death. Brünnhilde, overcome with pity, determines to save them. Then comes the fight between Siegmund and Hunding. Brünnhilde covers Siegmund with her shield, but as he is about to deal Hunding a deadly blow, Wotan suddenly appears, thrusts out his spear, against which Siegmund's sword is shattered. Siegmund is slain. With a mere gesture Wotan slays Hunding. Brünnhilde quickly gathers the fragments of the sword, and carries Sieglinde away in order to place her in safety before Wotan's wrath shall descend upon her. The third act reveals the Rock of the Valkyrs, where after assembling in a wild flight the war maidens await Brünnhilde, their sister. A moment later Brünnhilde brings in Sieglinde, tells the other Valkyrs what she has done, and begs them to save Sieglinde from Wotan. Sieglinde asks only to die, but Brünnhilde tells her she shall bear a hero, and gives her the fragments of Nothung to keep for him until he shall have become a man. Sieglinde then gladly seeks the shelter of a cavern. Brünnhilde prepares to face Wotan, who soon appears, and after sending her sisters away pronounces her doom. No longer his favourite war maiden, she shall, as a mere woman, become the property of the first man who claims her. After vainly endeavouring to soften Wotan, Brünnhilde as a last request begs that she may be surrounded by a wall of fire, so that only a hero may dare to claim her. To this Wotan consents. Touched with pity, he bids her a fond farewell, then lays her upon a bed of moss, covers her with shield and helmet, and striking the rock with his spear invokes Loge. Flames spring up, a protecting barrier about the Valkyr's bed, and as Wotan retires he utters the words: "Who fears the tip of my spear, never shall pass through this fire." The curtain falls. "Siegfried." The son of Siegmund and Sieglinde, now a well grown lad, brought up by Mime, watches his father by adoption attempt to forge a long promised sword. But such weapons as Mime can forge, Siegfried breaks at a blow. Mime seeks to recover the Ring and the other treasure from Fafner, realizes that he can accomplish this only through Siegfried, so he shows the fragments of Nothung to the lad, saying if Siegfried could only reforge this sword he might be able to slay the Dragon (Fafner). Siegfried commands Mime to try again, and goes into the forest, leaving the dwarf alone. Wotan enters, disguised as the Wanderer, claiming hospitality. In the dialogue which follows, the action of the previous dramas is recalled. Then dwarf and god agree that each shall ask the other three questions, and that failure to answer shall forfeit the loser's head. Mime asks: Who dwell in the bowels of the earth? who on the face of the earth? and who on the cloudy heights? Wotan replies the dwarfs, the giants, the gods, of whom Wotan is chief. Then as Wotan's spear strikes the ground, thunder is heard, and Mime realizes that his visitor is the chief god himself. Wotan propounds these questions: What race does Wotan persecute, though he loves them? what sword must Siegfried have in order to slay Fafner? who will forge that sword? Mime replies that it is the Volsungs whom Wotan persecutes yet loves, and that the sword is called Nothung, but he cannot answer the third question. Wotan tells him laughingly that Nothung can be forged only by one who knows no fear, and bequeaths Mime's head to that hero. Mime, again alone, is overcome with terror, and when Siegfried returns the sword is still in fragments. Siegfried undertakes the task himself. As he works, Mime realizing that he will succeed, prepares a poison with which to kill the boy when he shall have slain the Dragon. Siegfried, singing at his task, perfects the weapon, then swinging it over his head, cleaves through the anvil at a single blow. The second act portrays the forest near the cave in which Fafner, transformed by the power of the Tarnhelm into a Dragon, guards the Ring and treasure. Alberich and Wotan meet, and the dwarf greets the god with a volley of abuse, to which Wotan replies that Siegfried threatens to slay the Dragon, and suggests that Alberich may recover the Ring by warning the Dragon of impending danger. But the Dragon, answering Alberich, declares in a sleepy voice that he will welcome the hero, as he is hungry, and bids Alberich let him sleep in peace. Wotan vanishes, and Alberich hides to await the coming of the hero. Bearing in mind that he should be killed, according to Wotan's prophecy, by a "fearless one," Mime brings Siegfried to see the Dragon, in order that he may be frightened, meaning, in case the Dragon is slain, to poison Siegfried, and possess himself of the treasure. Siegfried orders Mime to leave him, cuts a whistle with which he tries to imitate the songs of the forest birds, and when the Dragon pokes its head from the cavern, instead of being frightened only laughs. Then he attacks and kills the Dragon, which, in dying, warns him of a plot against his life. A drop of the Dragon's blood has fallen on Siegfried's hand. It burns, and Siegfried puts his hand to his mouth, and is astonished to find that the taste of the Dragon's blood has enabled him to understand the language of the birds. One of the birds tells him to enter the cave and take the Ring, and when he has done so warns him against Mime. But the Dragon's blood has likewise enabled Siegfried to read Mime's thoughts before they are uttered, and when Mime offers him the poisoned drink Siegfried strikes him dead with a blow from his sword. Then the bird tells Siegfried of the beautiful Valkyr asleep on a rock surrounded by fire, and Siegfried asks the bird to lead him to the maiden. The third act takes place at the foot of the Rock of the Valkyrs. Wotan consults Erda as to the means of averting the doom closing about Walhalla, but finding her wisdom powerless to aid him, expresses his resignation to whatever fate may bring forth. Erda sinks back to earth as Siegfried appears, still following the bird. Wotan attempts to bar Siegfried's progress, but with a stroke of Nothung, Siegfried severs Wotan's spear, and the god vanishes. Siegfried climbs boldly through the flames, and in a moment the scene changes to the fiery circle within which Brünnhilde sleeps. Siegfried removes her helmet and armour, and is filled with wonder. He has never before seen a woman, and beneath the shining mail are the soft garments outlining a form dreamed of but unknown. For the first time he is afraid, but soon this new sensation passes away, and with a long impassioned kiss he awakens Brünnhilde. The Valkyr joyously greets the light, and recognizes the destined hero in Siegfried;

but recalling her divine origin, seeks to repel his advances. Siegfried's passion finally awakens the woman's soul, and the former Valkyr yields to his embraces. "Die Götterdämmerung." The last drama of the Tetralogy opens with a prologue. Three Nornes or Fates are in conference near the Rock of the Valkyrs. Fastening their golden rope to a tree, or rock, they narrate in turn the early coming of Wotan, who had fashioned his spear from the World-ash tree, how Siegfried had broken the spear, and how Wotan had thereafter caused his heroes to make firewood of the World-ash to serve as the pyre of the gods at Walhalla when the end should come. But before they can foretell what is about to happen, their golden rope breaks, and they vanish. The day dawns. Siegfried and Brünnhilde come forth from their cavern. Besides imparting much of her divine wisdom to Siegfried, Brünnhilde has given him her shining armour, has made him invulnerable, except in the back, and she gives him her horse Grane, that he may ride forth to new adventures. To Brünnhilde Siegfried gives the Ring in pledge of fidelity. The Hall of the Gibichungs, overlooking the Rhine, is shown as the curtain rises on the first act. Gunther longs to wed Brünnhilde, and his sister Gutrune loves Siegfried, whose exploits she has heard, though neither of them is aware Siegfried and Brünnhilde have been united. Hagen, half brother of Gunther and Gutrune, has inherited from his father Alberich a wild and ruthless nature and has promised to aid Alberich to recover the Ring. In counselling the marriage of Gutrune and Siegfried, Hagen means that Siegfried shall then be compelled to go through the flames to bring Brünnhilde for Gunther. It is suggested that Siegfried may already be in love, but Hagen has brewed a magic philtre which will cause the hero to love Gutrune and forget all other women. When this plan has been agreed on, Siegfried's horn is heard in the distance, as he is sailing down the Rhine in a boat. The Gibichungs welcome him, he accepts a horn of mead from Gutrune, drinks, instantly forgets Brünnhilde, and loves Gutrune. He demands her hand in marriage, and the brothers agree, only stipulating that Siegfried shall first bring Brünnhilde to them. Siegfried and Gunther swear blood-brotherhood, and the two set forth in quest of Brünnhilde, while Hagen remains to guard the house. Then the action shifts to the scene of the prologue. Brünnhilde is visited by her sister Valkyr, Waltraute, who tells of the gloom in Walhalla, where the gods await their end. Wotan had said that if Brünnhilde would return the Ring to the Rhine maidens, the curse it had brought upon the gods and the world would be removed. But to Brünnhilde the Ring is pledge of Siegfried's love, and she declines. As Waltraute rides back to Walhalla, Siegfried's horn is heard. It is Siegfried, but, by the Tarnhelm's power, in the likeness of Gunther, who enters. Brünnhilde flies in terror from this stranger, but Siegfried pursues, subdues, and deprives her of the Ring. Together they enter the cavern, but Siegfried has drawn his sword to place between them in proof of his fidelity to Gunther. The second act transpires on the river bank in front of the Hall of the Gibichungs. Hagen, spear in hand, sits asleep in the moonlight. Alberich talks to him, appearing as in a dream or vision, and father and son plan to possess themselves of the Ring, and to rule the world between them. At the dawn of day Siegfried appears. He recounts the adventure just concluded, and explains that he has come at once, by using his Tarnhelm, while Gunther and Brünnhilde are following in a boat. Hagen thereupon calls the vassals together with a blast of his horn, and orders preparations for the wedding of Gunther. On seeing Siegfried, Brünnhilde is so overcome with emotion as to faint in his arms. But when Siegfried claims Gutrune as his bride, and she sees the Ring on his finger, she is both angry and astonished. She claims Siegfried as her husband. He, still under the influence of Hagen's philtre, swears on Hagen's spear that her accusation is false. By the same ceremony Brünnhilde renews her charges, and consecrates the weapon to Siegfried's destruction. Siegfried enters the hall with Gutrune, and at Hagen's instigation Brünnhilde and Gunther begin to plan the murder of the hero. Brünnhilde explains that he is vulnerable only in the back, and it is decided that he shall be killed while hunting. The third act takes place in a dense forest near the Rhine. The Rhine maidens are still bewailing the loss of their treasure. Siegfried, wandering away from his companions, draws near them, and they plead with him to give them the Ring. Finding him obdurate, they threaten him with impending death, which makes him only the more obstinate. The huntsmen gather for rest and refreshment. Hagen mingles with Siegfried's drink a potion which restores his memory, so he tells the story of his life, including the wooing and winning of Brünnhilde. Then the ravens fly through the wood, and as Siegfried turns to look at them, Hagen stabs him in the back. Siegfried turns and tries to crush Hagen with his shield; but the effort is too much, and he falls, dying, on his shield, which has dropped from his clutch. His last words are a delirious greeting to Brünnhilde. Then the scene shifts back to the Hall of the Gibichungs. Gutrune, who is waiting for the return of Siegfried, hears from Hagen that Siegfried has been killed by a wild boar, and swoons when the body is brought in. Hagen lays claim to the Ring, and when opposed by Gunther kills him. Then Hagen attempts to remove the Ring from Siegfried's hand, but the dead hand is raised in menace, just as Brünnhilde enters. Gutrune complains that Brünnhilde is responsible for the evil which has befallen them, but Brünnhilde haughtily replies that Siegfried was her husband, and directs that the funeral pyre be built. Then removing the Ring from Siegfried's finger, after Siegfried's body has been placed in position, she fires the pyre with a torch, and seizing Grane, rushes into the flames. The Hall of the Gibichungs catches fire, but soon the pyre dies down and collapses. Then the waters of the Rhine overflow the Hall, and the Rheintöchter swim in on the waves to rescue the precious Ring from the ashes. Hagen, who attempts to tear the Ring from the Rhine maidens is drowned, and as the Rhine maidens rejoice in the recovery of their treasure, a great light arises in the north. Walhalla is burning. The reign of the gods has ended. In these music dramas Wagner's employment of the LEIT MOTIF reaches its culmination. It is said that these themes suggested themselves to him as he was writing the books and before he had actually begun to compose the music. However that may be they are interwoven with marvellous ingenuity throughout the text of the Tetralogy, and are assembled most effectively, not only in the Funeral March, but in Brünnhilde's farewell. Despite Wagner's aversion to the performance of his music in concert form, such passages as the Ride of the Valkyrs, Wotan's Farewell and the Magic Fire Scene from Walküre; the Waldweben from Siegfried; and the Funeral March from Götterdämmerung have been favourite concert numbers for years.

Robert le Diable. Giacomo Meyerbeer's five-act opera to book by Scribe was first performed Nov. 21, 1831, at the Paris Académie Royale. Robert, Duke of Normandy, enters the tent of the Sicilian knights at Palermo and hears Raimbaut, a Norman minstrel, sing the ballad which describes the love affair of his mother, the Princess Bertha, with the Devil, of which Duke Robert was said to be the fruit. Enraged, Robert orders the minstrel hanged. The man is saved by the intercession of Alice, his betrothed, who is likewise foster-sister to Robert, and has come from Normandy to bring him a message from his dying mother. Robert feels unworthy to read the scroll Alice gives him. He tells of his love for Princess Isabelle, how he tried to carry her off by force, but was prevented by her knights, who would have killed him but for the courage of his friend Bertram. At the suggestion of Alice, he dictates a letter declaring his love for the Princess, gives it to her to deliver, and promises that she shall marry Raimbaut. Alice encounters Bertram as she leaves, and is frightened at his likeness to a picture of the Devil she has seen somewhere. Bertram induces Robert to gamble, and the young Duke loses all his possessions, and is jeered at by his companions. The second act takes place in the apartment of the Princess Isabelle, who receives with joy the letter from Robert. She leaves as Robert and Bertram enter. Robert has challenged the Prince who is betrothed to Isabelle to combat, and by herald the Prince announces his desire that it shall be a duel to the death. The royal family assembles. Robert has gone to the forest, and before joining him there the Prince desires that Isabelle assist in arming him. As she hands the arms to his squire she secretly prays for the success of Robert. The third act discloses in a ruined temple, a cavern and a cross. Raimbaut enters, seeking Alice, but Bertram fills his mind with doubt about the girl and his pockets with gold. Bertram, who is actually a demon, and the father of Robert, rejoices that his son's doom is approaching. A chorus of fiends welcomes him as he enters the cavern. Hearing the infernal outburst from the cavern, in which she can distinguish the name Robert, Alice, who comes to meet Raimbaut, faints, but clings to the cross. Bertram returns from the cavern, and threatens Alice with the death of all she loves if she tells what she has seen. He orders her to leave as Robert appears, and then tells Robert that her agitation is due to jealousy of Raimbaut. As to the Prince, Bertram declares that he has employed sorcery to prevent the duel, and that by sorcery he must be overthrown. Robert enters a cavern to seek a branch of magic power. Statues of nuns, called to life by Bertram, seek to enthrall him, and the ballets of "Intoxication," "Gaming" and "Love" are part of their seductions. Robert shrinks from the nuns in terror, seizes the branch and escapes. In act four Robert reaches the castle just as the Princess Isabelle, surrounded by her bridesmaids, prepares for her marriage to the prince. Robert, with his magic branch, causes the entire assemblage to sleep, with the exception of Isabelle. She reproaches him for not having been present for the duel, and implores him to throw off the evil influences which surround him. He agrees, breaks the magic branch, the people instantly awake, and Robert is placed under arrest. The fifth act represents the cloisters; Robert enters, dragging Bertram after him. Bertram promises him success in everything if he will but sign a scroll. Robert is about to do so, when he hears a hymn he had known in childhood. Bertram, who knows that if he does not win Robert's soul before midnight, it will be lost him forever, redoubles his efforts, and finally owns that he is the young Duke's father. Alice enters to combat the demon's purpose. Finally Robert reads the scroll sent by his dying mother, finds in it a warning against the demon, and as he hesitates the clock strikes twelve, and Bertram vanishes forever, while men and angels sing a joyful chorus. Rome is the seat of the SISTINE CHOIR, at once the most venerable and celebrated of the world's church choirs and music schools, possessor of a municipal orchestra directed by Alessandro Vessella, which gave weekly concerts during the greater part of the year at the Argentina Theatre, the Costanzi and other theatres devoted to lyric art, many splendid church choirs, of which that at the Cathedral of St. John Lateran, presided over by Filippo CAPOCCI is justly famous, and of the Royal

Academy of Sta. Caecilia, formerly a papal institution, which in 1908 included an endowed Liceo or school of music with tuition as low as a dollar a month, directed by Commendatore Stanislao Falchi, having a faculty of 40 professors, including SGAMBATI and Penelli, and nearly 250 students. The school received an allowance of about $16,000 per annum from the government. The history and æsthetics of music, general Italian literature, as well as the theory and practice of music, were taught in all branches, and in its first 25 years the Liceo provided instruction for 1387 pupils, of whom 415 received diplomas. The Congregazione dei Musici di Roma sotto l'invocazione di Sta. Caecilia was founded by Pope Pius V, 1566, its charter confirmed by Gregory XIII, 1584, and it included in its membership practically all the great musicians of Italy from the age of Palestrina, and many of the most distinguished of foreign composers down to the days of Liszt and Gounod. Originally the congregation was presided over by a cardinal, who was assisted by a council and professors of all branches of music. In 1689, by papal decree, the congregation was empowered to license all professional musicians. The title of Academy or "ACCADEMIA" was first conferred by Gregory XVI, 1839, and in 1841 the institution gave the first performance in Italy of Rossini's Stabat Mater. Several attempts at establishing a music school in connection with the Academy failed until 1869, when Sgambati and Penelli actually began free lessons for the piano and violin in the Academy's building, the success of which resulted in a decree the following year in which the Liceo was formally recognized. With the destruction of the temporal power of the Pope, the Academy became a royal institution. In 1875 a provisional committee of the Academy gave way in the management of the Liceo to a council of direction headed by Commendatore Emilio Broglio, and besides Sgambati and Penelli, Alessandro Orzini, Ferdinando Forino, and Vedasto

Vecchietti were added to the faculty. In 1886 Commendatore Fillippo Marchetti became director of the Liceo under a new constitution which permitted the acceptance of a governmental subsidy. The Academy was presided over in 1908 by Count di San Martino, and enjoyed the patronage of the royal family, the King being honorary president. To trace the history of the schools founded in Rome by GUIDO, GAUDIO MELL, PALESTRINA and NANINI, Natale, etc., would be to write the history of Italian music. The influence of Rome in musical matters has always been far reaching, and the present Supreme Pontiff, PIUS X, will doubtless be regarded by posterity as one of the most important of musical reformers.

Rondo is a FORM differing from other movements of the sonata or symphony in not having the first part marked for repeat, while the principal subject does not modulate, reappears at the close of the first period in its keychord, and also after the modulation of the second subject. Subject to many variations, the arrangement of the movement usually offers a first subject which remains in the original key and sometimes enters without introduction followed by an episode modulated into the relative major or minor key; then a second subject in the dominant or relative major, with a modulation returning to the first subject in the original key, with which the first part closes. The second half begins with the second subject modulated into remote keys followed by the first subject; next, an episode preparing for the entrance of the second subject, followed by a final episode and coda, returning to the original key. The rondo probably originated in a dance having couplets or solos, alternating with rondeaux or chorus, and was a favourite form with early composers.

Rosina. Ballad opera with music written or selected by William Shield, was first performed 1783, Covent Garden. The story is similar to that of Ruth and Boaz. A passage in the overture resembles "Auld Lang Syne," and has led to the claim that Shield was the composer of that melody.

Rossini (Gioacchino Antonio) composed the "BARBER OF SEVILLE" (Barbiere di Siviglia), one of the world's greatest comic operas, and one which has delighted the opera lovers of three generations; "GUILLAUME TELL" ("William Tell"), a masterly serious opera which still holds a prominent place in repertoire; a STABAT

MATER, regarded as the most impressive of those in florid style; composed a total of 35 operas from his 18th to his 37th year, eclipsing all rivals; then foreswore dramatic composition because of the success of Meyerbeer, and devoted himself to a life of pleasure. Giuseppe Rossini, the town trumpeter of Lugo, was likewise inspector of slaughter houses, but having announced his republican sympathies during the troublous year 1796, he was deprived of his appointments and imprisoned. His wife, a baker's daughter, then obtained employment as a comic singer in the smaller Italian theatres, and the future composer accompanied his mother in her wanderings. The elder Rossini was finally freed, and joined his wife, playing horn at the theatres in which she sang, while the boy was sent to Bologna in charge of a pork butcher. Prinetti gave him harpsichord lessons, but with so little result that young Rossini began to play practical jokes on his master, who avenged himself by having the lad apprenticed to a smith. Angelo Tesei, a teacher of the better type, next gave the boy lessons in harmony and singing. At 10 he was able to earn money by singing solos in church; shortly after he sang a rôle in the opera at the municipal theatre, and at 13 was qualified to play horn and accompany on the cembalo. He was taking lessons from Babbini, an old tenor, when his voice broke, and he then entered the Bologna Conservatory, which now bears his name above its portal, receiving instruction in counterpoint from Padre Mattei and on the cello from Cavedagni. He had already composed "Demetrio," an opera; some songs, and horn duos, and when, after months of study, Mattei informed him that while he was not sufficiently well grounded in counterpoint for church music, he knew enough to compose operas, he promptly dropped his studies. In 1808 Rossini's cantata "Il Pianto d'armonia per la morte d'Orfeo," which had won the prize at the Conservatory, was publicly performed. His next work was an overture in fugue form. Through the kindness of Marquis Cavalli, he was commissioned to compose an opera for the San Mosè theatre, Venice. His "La Cambiale di Matrimonio," a one-act opera buffa, was well received at the San Mosè, 1810, and led to further commissions. Thus in the same year he composed the cantata "Didone abbandonata," produced at Bologna, the two-act opera "L'Equivoco stravagante" for the Corso theatre of Bologna, 1811, as well as the "Demetrio e Polibio" for the Teatro Valle. In 1812 he composed "L'Inganno felice" and "L'Occasione fa il Ladro," buffa pieces for the San Mosè, and the oratorio "Ciro in Babilonia," brought out in Lent at Ferrara. The failure of his oratorio, as well as of "La Scala di Seta," a one-act opera buffa composed for San Mosè, was offset by the highly successful production of the two-act "La Pietra del Paragone" at La Scala, Milan. In 1813 the composer was asked to prepare a work for La Fenice, Venice, which at once brought the manager of the San Mosè down on him with a contract by which he was compelled to write an opera for that house. Rossini complied with his contract, but "I due Bruschini" proved to be a practical joke which deeply amused those in the secret and correspondingly enraged those who were not. Then came "Tancredi," at La Fenice, which was immensely popular, and was followed by "L'Italiana in Algeri," an opera buffa for the San Benedetto, Venice, and "Aureliano in Palmira," which failed at La Scala. For a time Rossini settled in Milan, much fêted by the aristocracy, and in 1814 his "Il Turco in Italia" was produced at La Scala, and he composed the cantata "Egle ed Irene" for the Princess Belgiojoso. "Sigismondo," written for the Fenice, 1815, proved such a disheartening failure that the composer withdrew to his home in Bologna. Barbaja, the Neapolitan impresario encountered him there, and persuaded him to accept the direction of the San Carlo and Del Fondo theatres, and to write two operas for him annually. Rossini's salary was fixed at about $2400 per annum, and for the next eight years he worked constantly and with enormous profit to Barbaja. "Elizabetta," produced at Naples, 1815, foreshadowed Scott's "Kenilworth" in subject, and marked the beginning of Rossini's new style, for in it he abandoned the use of recitativo secco. The overture to this work is now played before the "Barber of Seville," one of the next of his operas in chronological order, for which the overture has been lost. "Torvaldo e Dorliska" was produced at Rome, but quickly withdrawn. Next came his masterpiece in light opera, which was given its first performance at the Argentina as "Almaviva," and nearly produced a riot, Paisiello having already produced a Barber of Seville which the Romans greatly admired. Although roundly hissed, the management played Rossini's work again and again, and it eventually became a prime favourite in the house where it had been originally almost denied a hearing. The Barber is said to have been composed in thirteen days, but in the hurry which marked this portion of the composer's career, it is not surprising that he should have resorted to the practice of borrowing melodies from his earlier works. Many of the 20 dramatic pieces produced during his connection with Barbaja were mere pasticcios. His next work was "Teti e Peleo," a cantata for a royal wedding, then came the comic piece "La Gazzetta" for the Florentine theatre; "Otello," Teatro del Fondo, Naples, in which he introduced additional reforms, but was obliged to revise the tragedy and give it a happy ending. "La Cenerentola" (Cinderella), second only in merit to "The Barber," was produced at Rome, 1817, and the same year he achieved a fresh triumph at La Scala with "Gazza Ladra." His interest in serious opera is said to have been due the influence of Isabella COLBRAN, who had created many of his principal rôles, and with whom he soon fell in love. Colbran was seven years older than Rossini, but she possessed a country place and an income of $2500 per annum, and in 1821, having produced his opera "Zelmira" at

Naples previously to offering it to the more severe Viennese audiences, he accompanied her to Bologna, and they were married by Cardinal Oppizoni. Then they proceeded to the Austrian capital, where rehearsals were already in progress. "Zelmira" was well received, and the composer mingled pleasantly in Viennese society and is said to have paid his respects to Beethoven. It was doubtless owing to this sojourn in Vienna that he was commissioned by Prince Metternich to return for the Congress, and for this august assemblage he composed the cantatas "Il vero Omaggio," "La sacra Alleanza" and "Il Bardo." "SEMIRAMIDE," of merit surpassed only by "William Tell," and the work on which Rossini had spent more labour than on any other, was produced at La Fenice, 1823, where it failed. Rossini was disgusted, and gladly accepted the invitation of Benelli to write an opera for the King's theatre, London. Stopping in Paris en route, he made himself agreeable to the musicians and officials, and having cleaned up $35,000 profits during a short sojourn in England, despite the bankruptcy of his manager, and the loss of the first act of his London opera, "La figlia dell' aria," he returned to Paris, having made a contract to manage the Théâtre des Italiens at $4000 per annum. He held this appointment 18 months, producing several of his own operas which had not hitherto been heard in Paris, and also Meyerbeer's "Crociato," and composed the new opera "Il Viaggio a Reims" for his company. The artistic success of Rossini's engagement was more pronounced than the financial, but he had become a favourite with the Parisians, and he was given the posts of first composer to the king and inspector-general of song in France, sinecures with an income of $4000. Pleased with this recognition, Rossini revised his operas "Mao-metto" and "Mosè" that they might be sung in a French version at the Académie, and began work on "Guillaume Tell," which he planned as the first of a series of five operas to be presented in Paris. The furore occasioned by this work led to an agreement by which Rossini was to have $3000 from the government of Charles X for one opera every second year, and a retiring pension of $1200. In accordance with this agreement, Rossini was planning an opera on Faust, after a holiday spent at Bologna, when the Revolution of July, 1830, took place, Charles X ceased to be king, and his successor repudiated the agreement. Returning to Paris, he prosecuted his claim against the government from 1830 until 1835, when his pension was restored. The Stabat Mater, his only work during these years, was composed for the Spanish ambassador, and this he did not then complete, leaving the last four numbers to Tadolini. The management of the opera had either shelved or mutilated his works in performance, and the Meyerbeer craze had then begun. Rossini remained to hear the first performance of the Huguenots, Feb. 29, 1836, and thereafter renounced opera. Returning to Bologna, he taught Alboni and others as honorary director of that Liceo where he had been himself a student. Finding that his Stabat Mater had been sold to a speculative Parisian, he completed the work himself, and sold the performing rights to the Ecudiers for $1600 for three months, and they in turn disposed of it to the Théâtre des Italiens for $4000. Under the management of this house it was performed in its entirety Jan. 7, 1842, at the Salle Ventadour. The "Inno popolare a Pio IX" was the only important work produced during this sojourn in Bologna. In 1845 his wife died, and in 1847 he married Olympe Pelissier, whom he had admired in Paris. Political disturbances necessitated his withdrawal to Florence that same year, but in 1855 he returned to Paris, finally establishing himself in a villa at Passy, where he entertained his friends of the artistic world. He agreed to a revival of his "Bruschino" at the Bouffes Parisiens, 1857, but would not even witness the performance, contenting himself with occasional compositions for the piano, and in a life of idleness and pleasure. The "Petit Messe Solennelle, which is really a work of large proportions, requiring two hours for performance, is the only notable work of the master's later years. It was first sung Mar. 14, 1864, at the home of Count Pillet-Will. A man of kindly impulse, an epicure, a wit, Rossini's life, wonderful for its early activity in contrast with the idleness which he preferred on acquiring the means to indulge it, was singularly happy. He had been made Foreign Associate of the Institut, Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, commander of numerous other orders and a member of many learned bodies; he had everywhere been fêted and made much of, and he had known poverty only in childhood. By his will the greater part of his property went to establish a conservatory in his birthplace, Pesaro, of which the directors have been Bazzini and Mascagni. Works to be noted not mentioned in what has been said include the operas: "Adelaide di Borgogna," "Adina," "Armida," "L'Assedio di Corinto," "Bianca e Faliero," "Le Comte Ory," "La Dame du Lac" ("La Donna del Lago"), "Edoardo e Cristina," "Matilda di Scharbran," "Ottone, Rè d'Italia"; the cantatas "Partenope," "Igea," "La riconoscenza," "L'Augurio felice," "Il pianto delle Muse in Morte di Lord Byron," "I pastori," "Il serto votivo"; the sacred music, Tantum Ergo, for two ten. bass and orchestra; Quoniam, bass solo and orchestra; O Salutaris, four solo voices; five string quartets; a quantity of piano music, often with humorous titles, sold in manuscript for $20,000 by his widow. B. Feb. 29, 1792, Pesaro; d. Nov. 13, 1868, Passy near Paris. See biographies by H. S. Edwards, London, 1869; "G. Rossini, sa vie et œuvres," A. This eminent author was obliged to copy music for a livelihood, and while not profoundly versed in the rules of counterpoint and harmony, possessed considerable creative talent, as is proven by numerous compositions. His life is told with amusing frankness in his Confessions, his notation is described in his "Dissertation sur la musique moderne," Paris, 1743, and during the quarrels between adherents of the French and Italian schools of music he published "Lettre sur la Musique française," in which he concludes that "the French have no music, never will have any; or if they should, it will be so much the worse for them." The company of the Opéra responded by burning Rousseau in effigy, to which he replied with the satirical "Lettre d'un symphoniste de l'Académie royale de musique à ses camarades de l'orchestre." His "Essai sur l'origine des langues," 1753, besides chapters on harmony and Greek music, gives the germ of subsequent absurdities regarding the alleged analogies between tones and colors. His "Lettre à M. Burney sur la Musique, avec des fragments d'observations sur l'Alceste italien de M. le chevalier Gluck" is one of the earliest and best examples of opera analyses. His controversy with RAMEAU and others created intense interest, but he was manly enough to correct many of his errors in later life, while clinging to his admiration of Gluck. Besides the compositions noted Rousseau composed "Les muses galantes," 1747, which failed, and fragments of an opera "Daphnis et Chloe," published in Paris, 1780. B. June 28, 1712, Geneva; d. July 3, 1778, Ermenonville, near Paris.

Royal Academy of Music taught music in all branches, having in 1908 a staff of 102 professors, 20 assistants, 500 pupils, with 59 scholarships including 15 founded by Mrs. Ada Lewis Hill and 33 prizes. The principal was Sir Alexander Campbell Mackenzie, whose administration, beginning 1888 was the first that could be called successful. He was aided by a committee of management consisting of professors and a few laymen. There were departments for languages, elocution, diction, dancing, the drama, fencing, deportment, all comfortably housed in Tenterden street, London. A small subsidy is allowed by the British Government, and in connection with the ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, the Academy holds examinations in music throughout the empire, and issues diplomas. Public performances are a feature of the school year. The institution was organized 1822, under royal patronage, by an assemblage of the nobility and gentry presided over by the Earl of Westmoreland, then Lord Burghersh, and Dr. Crotch was made the first principal, an office to which Cipriani Potter, Charles Lucas, William Sterndale Bennett, and George Alexander Macfarren succeeded in turn. For many years the Academy lacked adequate financial support, small grants being allowed by one government, and disallowed by the party next succeeding to power. In 1908 besides $2500 from the government the Academy was supported by donations, fees, and subscriptions. The president then was H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught. An earlier Royal Academy, founded in London 1720 and becoming extinct eight years later, raised $250,000 to guarantee Italian opera, which had been discontinued three years before. The then Duke of Newcastle was Governor of the Academy, which included most of the higher nobility among its supporters. BONONCINI and HANDEL became the directors, and many of their operas were then heard for the first time. Performances took place in the King's theatre in the Haymarket, but continued at a loss until the extraordinary success of the "BEGGAR'S OPERA" put a quietus to the Academy, which had expended the whole of the guarantee fund, and was disrupted by dissensions.

Royal Amateur Orchestral Society was founded in London, 1872 by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, later Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, who became president and leader of the orchestra. The first conductor was Sir Arthur Sullivan. For 29 years George Mount was conductor, when Ernest Ford succeeded him.

Royal Choral Society gave admirable oratorio concerts in London. In 1872 the choir founded by Charles F. Gounod and that of Sir Joseph Barnby were united under the latter's conductorship, as the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, and the name above given was bestowed by Queen Victoria, 1888. On the death of Sir Joseph Barnby, 1896, Sir Frederick Bridge became conductor.

Royal College of Music taught music in all branches, the faculty being headed in 1908 by RANDEGGER and VISETTI, Singing; FRANKLIN TAYLOR, piano; ARBOS, and RIVARDE, violin; Sir C. V. STANFORD, composition; Sir J. F. BRIDGE, theory; with Sir Hubert PARRY as director. There were nearly 400 students, and the College had its own buildings, including a concert room, in Prince Consort Road, London. A "Patrons Fund," founded by S. Ernest Palmer, 1903, of about $140,000 is used for the encouragement of native composers. The libraries of the SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, and of the CONCERTS OF ANCIENT MUSIC, the latter presented by Queen Victoria, are in possession of the College. An outgrowth of the NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL, the College dates back to 1882. It is affiliated with the ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC in the matter of examinations only. The Prince of Wales, now Edward VII, was president of the council of administration, and Sir George GROVE was the first director. In 1908 the council was headed by the Prince of Wales.

Royal Irish Academy of Music taught music in all branches, having a faculty of more than 40 in 1908 and an enrollment of nearly 500. The Academy then had an endowment of nearly $100,000, and was administered by a Board of Governors. The King is patron, the Duke of Connaught vice patron, and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland ex officio president of the board. The professors have included Sir Robert Stewart, Joseph ROBINSON, Mrs. Fanny ROBINSON, Levey, Elsner, Bast, and Michele ESPOSITO.

Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain distributed its income, amounting in 1908 to $15,000 for the relief of indigent musicians or their families. The members, since the union of the organization with the Royal Society of Female Musicians [1839-66], have been professional musicians of either sex, aided by the voluntary services of a medical and legal staff. Dr. W. H. Cummings was the honorary treasurer in 1908. The Society was founded by FESTING and WEIDEMANN, and its charter members, 1738, included HANDEL, BOYCE, C. SMITH, CAREY, COOKE, E. PURCELL, LEVERIDGE, GREENE, READING, HAYES, PEPUSCH, TRAVERS, and has since included the most eminent of British musicians.

Roze (Marie Hippolyte) sang sop. in opera, creating in English such important rôles as "Manon Lescaut," "Margaret," and "Helen" in Boito's "Mefistofele"; debut, Aug. 16, 1865, Paris Opéra Comique, as Marie in Heerold's opera of the same name, after having won first prize at the Paris Conservatoire. While singing in England, 1874, she married Julius Edson Perkins, an American baritone, and on his death Henry MAPLESON, making highly successful tours in America and elsewhere under his management. From 1882 until 1889 she alternated between the CARL ROSA company, the Italian opera in London and in America, then settled in Paris as a teacher, making a farewell appearance, however, at a concert given by a pupil in London, 1903. B. Mar. 2, 1846; maiden name Ponsin; add. Paris.

Buana. East Indian instrument of the viol family.

Rubato. It. "Stolen, robbed," the deviation from strict time, giving one note greater and others less duration than signature calls for. The judicious use of Rubato is essential to the proper expression of most music, but its abuse is equally general.

Rübezahl. C. M. von Weber's two-act opera, to book by J. G. Rhode, was composed, 1804-6, at Breslau. Three numbers are still extant in MS. Many operas by other composers have borne this title. That of Friedrich von Flotow was first performed 1854.

Rubinelli (Giovanni Battista) sang in opera; debut in Sacchini's "Calliroe," Stuttgart, 1771, later throughout Italy and in London. B. 1753, Brescia; d. 1829, Brescia.

Rubini (Giovanni Battista) sang ten., creating many rôles for Bellini, Donizetti, and Rossini; invented the "sob" and "vibrato," both of which have been subjected to vulgar abuse ever since; possessed range from E to b' with falsetto register to f'; was "the King of Tenors" from his debut at Paris in "Cenerentola," 1825, until his retirement, 1844; first appearance in woman's rôle at Rome at 12, then member of Barbaja's company in Naples. He spent the best part of his career in Paris and London, although he occasionally made tours, such as that of 1843 with Liszt; when he received more than $10,000 for a single concert in St. Petersburg, so delighting Emperor Nicholas that he conferred on him the rank of colonel and the post "director of singing"; pupil of Don Santo, priest and organist at Adro. B. April 7, 1795, Romano, near Bergamo; d. Mar. 2, 1854, at his estate at Romano.

Rubinstein (Anton Gregorovitch) founded the ST. PETERSBURG CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC; composed the opera "DEMONIO," and in every form; was the greatest of recent pianists with the exception of Liszt; wrote on musical topics. Son of a Jewish manufacturer who had established himself in Volhynia, as a child, Rubinstein was first the pupil of his mother, who is said to have been an accomplished pianist, then of Alexander Villoing, of Moscow, under whom his progress was so rapid that his teacher introduced him at a public concert at nine in Moscow, and then took him to Paris, where in 1840 his playing aroused the admiration of Liszt and Chopin. In accordance with their advice the boy studied composition with Dehn in Berlin, together with his brother NIKOLAI, but continued to give concerts, appearing in Germany, England, and Scandinavia until 1846, when he settled in Vienna as a teacher, and made occasional concert tours of Hungary and Austria. In 1848 he returned to St. Petersburg, and for the next eight years studied, composed, and lived at ease under the patronage of Grand Duchess Helen. His earliest operas, "Dimitri Donskoi," 1852, "Die Sibirischen Jäger," 1852, "Toms der Narr," 1853, and "Hadji-Abrek," 1853, were not at first performed, but others of his works had crept into print, been well received, and when he resumed his concert tours, he was already widely known, both as a composer and pianist. A series of brilliant performances in St. Petersburg and Moscow in 1858 led to his appointment as chapelmaster to the Imperial Court with an income for life. In 1859 he founded the Russian Musical Society, of which he became conductor, and in 1862 established the St. Petersburg Conservatory, of which he was the principal for the next five years. In reward for this important service to art he was given the Order of St. Vladimir, which raised him to the nobility. 1869-70 were spent in concert tours of Europe, then he accepted the conductorship of the Vienna Philharmonic and Choral concerts, but without wholly relinquishing his career as virtuoso. His remarkable American tour, 1872-73, brought him $40,000 for 215 concerts, and so enhanced his popularity in the New World that he was afterwards offered $125,000 for 50 concerts, but could not overcome his dread of the voyage. From 1887 to 1891 he was again at the head of the St. Petersburg Conservatory, then resided for a time in Berlin and Dresden, and again returned to Russia. It was Rubinstein's desire to be known as a composer, and he revived, or perhaps created, the form of sacred opera; but his reputation as a pianist was so great that his merit as a creative genius was not fully realized, and he was forced to give concert tours long after he had planned his retirement. His literary works include an Autobiography in celebration of his jubilee as an artist, 1889; "Die Kunst und Ihre Meister," 1892; "Erinnerungen aus 50 Jahren," and the posth. "Gedankenkorb," 1897. Ruckers (Hans) made harpsichords in Antwerp and founded that celebrated family which for nearly a hundred years, beginning 1579, made the best instruments of this class in the world. Son of Francis Ruckers of Mechlin, Hans, known as De Oude or "the Elder," became an expert at building and tuning organs, and it is believed that he was the first to have applied the organ mechanism of stops and registers to the HARPSICHORD in order to obtain variety of timbre, piano and forte. It is certain that his instruments show the addition of the octave string, that he was first to fasten the strings to hitch pins on the soundboard, and to add a second keyboard or manual. Instrument makers in those days were required to be artists as well as artisans, and in 1575 HANS was admitted to the guild of St. Lucas, Antwerp, as "clavinsbalmakerre." In the same year he married Naenken Cnaeps. In 1908, 20 of his instruments were still in existence, all highly prized because of

Samson et Dalila. Camille Saint-Saëns' three-act biblical opera, to book by Ferdinand Lemaire, was first performed Dec. 2, 1877, at Weimar, under the direction of Liszt, and is best known in the United States and England as an oratorio. The original cast included Samson, Ferenczy; Dalila, Von Muller; High Priest, Mitle. An elaborate production took place at the Paris Opéra, 1897. The action opens in a public square in Gaza, where the Jews are bewailing their misfortunes, and Samson endeavours to comfort them, and urges them to prayer. The satrap of Gaza, Abimelech, mocks at the devotion of the Jews, Samson denounces him, calls his people to arms, and when he is attacked by Abimelech, tears the satrap's sword from his hands, and kills him. The Philistines attack the Jews, but, thanks to Samson's leadership, they are repulsed. The scene changes to the temple of Dagon, where Abimelech's body is reposing in state. The High Priest urges the Philistines to attack the Jews, but a messenger announces that under Samson's leadership they are approaching to begin hostilities themselves. The High Priest curses the Jews and Samson. Abimelech's body is carried away, and the Jews enter, headed by Samson, singing songs of victory. Then comes the dance of the priestesses of Dagon, in which Dalila begins to weave her spell over the Jewish hero. The second act transpires in front of Dalila's house. She invokes the aid of the love god in overcoming Samson, and when the High Priest has told her of the defeat of the Philistines, is strengthened in her determination to enthrall the Jewish leader. Samson and Dalila are together in the next scene. As Samson declares his love, a storm breaks. Samson follows the temptress into her house, and Philistine soldiers are seen approaching. The third act reveals Samson, shorn of hair and blinded, working in a mill. The wailing of the other Jewish captives dies away as Samson bemoans his blindness. The scene shifts to the temple of Dagon, where the High Priest and the Philistines are celebrating their triumph over the Jews. Dalila and the priestesses are dancing. Samson is led in, and is mocked by the High Priest, who tells him that if Jehovah can make him see, the Philistines will join in adoration of the Jew's divinity. Samson is then ordered to offer a sacrifice to Dagon. A boy places him between the pillars which support the temple. The Jewish leader raises his voice in prayer, then, with a mighty tug, breaks the two pillars, and the wreck of the temple overwhelms him and his enemies alike.

San Carlo Theatre, Naples, the foremost opera house of the world during the administration of BARBAJA, 1810-39, shared with the SCALA the distinction of being

Italy's best opera house in 1908. The present building, which dates from 1816, was remodeled in 1844, and has a seating capacity of about 3500. operas once highly popular, masses, some of which are still performed; invented a machine for counting the vibrations of sounds and fixed a' at 436 vibrations, foreshadowing modern PITCH; founded a conservatory of music in St. Petersburg on Italian models, 1793; was highly successful chapelmaster, but was able to "discover" barbarisms in Mozart's quartets, "19 mortal errors in 36 bars!" Pupil of Vallotti or Padre Martini, Sarti was organist of Faenza Cathedral, 1748-50, and director of the theatre there for the next two years. "Pompeo in Armenia," his first opera, was well received in Faenza, and "Il Rè Pastore," Venice, 1753, was a pronounced success, and won him his appointment as director of the Italian opera at Copenhagen, where he was soon chapelmaster. During a sojourn in Italy he composed "I Contratemi" and "Didone abbandonata," Venice, 1767, and three other operas, then returned to Denmark, but was banished as a result of court intrigues, 1772. He directed the Venice Conservatorio dell' Ospedaletto, 1775-79, then became chapelmaster of Milan Cathedral, where Cherubini was first his pupil, then his assistant, and where he composed much church music, cantatas, and the operas "Le Gelosie villane" and "Farnace," 1776, Venice; "Achille in Sciro," 1779, Florence; "Giulio Sabino," 1781, Venice; "Fra i due Litiganti," Milan, 1782. Soon restored to the imperial favour, he remained in Russia until 1802, his compositions including the highly successful opera "Armida," a Te Deum on Potemkin's capture of Otchakow, introducing cannon and fireworks, an oratorio for two choirs, full orchestra and RUSSIAN HORN band, and a requiem for Louis XVI. Savage (Henry W.) made the first English productions of "Parsifal," "Mme. Butterfly," and for many years gave excellent performances of serious opera in English, but in 1907 devoted himself exclusively to such musical productions as "The Merry Widow," "The Prince of Pilsen," etc., and such plays as "The College Widow," "The County Chairman," and "The Devil" (Aug., 1908). Originally a real estate speculator in Boston, it fell to him in the ordinary course of affairs to complete the Castle Square Theatre in that city, 1895, and when the manager made a failure in business after the first season, he undertook to supply attractions himself, and was at once successful as a manager. Then he established the Castle Square opera company for the production of the best works in English, and toured the country successfully and during one season played at the Metropolitan Opera House. Rigid discipline combined with the enthusiasm of the young artists he chose, enabled him to attain a higher perfection in ensemble than his powerful rival Von CONRIED, but the difficulty of finding suitable theatres for opera led to his abandonment of this field, at least temporarily. Son of a maker of mathematical instruments, Savart was educated as a physician, but soon abandoned his practice to study the laws of sound and was the first to explain the importance of soundboards. His box fiddle, in which the wood was not arched as in ordinary violins, was pronounced by a jury which included Berton, Catel, Cherubini, Le Sueur and the violinist Lefebvre, to be equal if not superior to a fine Cremona, after Lefebvre had played both. The instrument is fully described in Savart's book published in Paris in 1819. B. June 30, 1791, Mezieres; d. Mar. 16, 1841, Paris.

Savoy Chapel Royal possesses an unusually fine collection of old and new melodies, which are sung by the choristers mostly in unison. The building was restored by Queen Victoria at a cost of $35,000, 1865, and takes its name from having been erected on the site of a palace which belonged to Count Peter of Savoy, 1246. The choristers are educated in a school attached to the chapel, which is supported by the sovereign's private purse instead of by allowance from the civil list as in the case of St. James Chapel Royal. The master in 1908 was H. Kingston. See "The Story of the Savoy," Loftie; "The History of the Savoy Chapel," Locking.

At first a cabinet maker, Sax played the serpent, but in the craft which he revolutionized was wholly self-taught. B. Feb. 1, 1791, Dinant, Belgium; d. April 26, 1865, Paris. Antoine Joseph "Adolphe" invented the SAXOPHONES; continued the work of his father, Charles Joseph, in making and improving the clarinets and in manufacturing all kinds of brass and wood wind instruments; received gold medals of honor, Paris Exhibitions, 1849, 1851, 1855; but despite the value of his work was twice forced into bankruptcy. B. Nov. 6, 1814, Dinant; d. Feb. 4, 1894. See Comettant's "Histoire d'un inventeur au XIXme Siècle," Paris, 1860; and Pontecoulant's "Organographie," Paris, 1861. Alphonse, Jr., worked for some years with his brother, ANTOINE JOSEPH "ADOLPHE," but failed on setting up business for himself.

Sax Horn is the name of a family of brass valve instruments invented by "ADOLPHE" SAX which have been generally adopted for military and other open-air bands. These horns are made in six compasses, as follows: E flat, Soprano or Flügel Horn; B flat, Alto Flügel Horn; E flat, Tenor or Althorn; B flat, Baritone or Althorn; B flat, Bass or Euphonium; E flat, Bass Tuba or Bombardon; and B flat, Contrabass. They give a compass of five octaves and average about two octaves each, and were intended by the inventor to take the place of key bugles, trumpets, and French horns, and at least afford a group in which there is perfect unity, a perfect scale, and correct intonation, although, of course, incapable of giving the peculiar timbre of older instruments.

Saxophone is the name of the brass-keyed instrument played by a single reed like that of the clarinet and intended by the inventor "ADOLPHE" SAX to replace clarinets, basset horns, and bassoons in military bands. The Saxophone is made in several voices, a Soprano in B flat; Alto in E flat; Tenor in B flat; Baritone in E flat; and Bass in B flat. There is a Soprano in E flat, and five varieties are ordinarily used in French military bands. The total compass is from b to f'''.

Scala divides with the SAN CARLO Theatre of Naples the distinction of being the foremost opera house in Southern Europe. The Ducal Theatre of Milan was destroyed by fire, 1776, and a new opera house was then erected on the site of Santa Maria della Scala, from which the theatre derives its name. The original cost was $200,000, but it could not now be duplicated for five times that amount. From 1872 La Scala has been the property of the municipality of Milan, which allows $49,000 per annum for its support, while the boxholders contribute $14,600, so that as an institution it is among the wealthiest in Europe. The total seating capacity of the house is 3600. The stage has a depth of 98 feet, while the proscenium is 145 x 54. The best school for the ballet in all the world was attached to La Scala in 1908. The exceptional excellence of performances there in the past decade were largely due to the management of GIULIO GATTI-CASAZZA, who retired from the management in 1908 to join ANDREAS DIPPEL at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Scale. In modern music the general adoption of Equal TEMPERAMENT divides the octave into twelve

nearly equal semitones, each of which can be used as a keynote in the construction of MAJOR and MINOR scales. It is assumed that the scales in GREEK music, borrowed from the older Egyptian and based on the notes sounded by the strings of the lyre, were reflected in the Church MODES, but that with the development of a keener sense of tonality, and with the progress of harmonic invention, the introduction of chromatics or semitones became a necessity, first recognized as MUSICA FICTA, although forbidden by church law, but later openly adopted. The human ear is capable of distinguishing shades of difference between more than a score of tones ranging between a single tone and its octave, but the adoption of a regular series of graduated steps in progression is so plainly a necessity that every race has adopted some division which has thus become conventionalized. Hindoo and Arabian musicians employ an ENHARMONIC scale having a greater number of divisions than is recognized in European music. The conventional division as inherited from the Greek and Church Modes recognized the following degrees in the ascending scale: the Tonic, first or keynote; the Supertonic or second note; the Mediant or third note; the Subdominant or fourth; the Dominant or fifth; the Superdominant or sixth; and the Subtonic, leading note or seventh, then the octave. In JUST INTONATION, as on instruments of the viol family or vocal music, there is a shade of difference between the so-called semitones, thus A sharp is a trifle lower than B flat, while on the keyboard of the organ and piano the same digital sounds a compromise tone pitched between the two. Now while this compromise is sometimes slightly jarring to the sensitive ear, it has made possible combinations in harmony, progressions and transitions in tonality which the ancients can hardly have dreamed of, while rendering the whole science of music less difficult to the student, and simplifying its NOTATION.

Scalchi (Sofia) sang con. and mezzo-sopr. in opera, debut, 1866, as "Ulrica," in "Ballo in Maschera." Later with success throughout Europe and America, rôles ranging from "Fides" to "Amneris" and "Siebel"; range f to b"; pupil of Boccabadati. B. Turin, Nov. 29, 1850; m. Sig. Pupil of Carissimi in Rome, Scarlatti first became known through his opera "L'Errore Innocente," Feb. 8, 1679, Rome. This won him the protection of Queen Christina of Sweden, who made him her chapelmaster. Five years later he was chapelmaster to the Viceroy of Naples and while in that city married Antonia Anzalone, and was busied with the composition and performance of dramatic pieces until 1702, when he settled in Florence as composer to Ferdinand III. Next he became assistant chapelmaster at the church of the Sta. Maria Maggiore, where he served until 1708. Then he was induced to return to Naples and directed the three conservatories in that city, received the honour of knighthood of the Golden Spur from the Pope at the request of his patron, Cardinal

Ottoboni, and composed the celebrated mass "Clementina" No. 2, and his one comic opera, "Trionfo dell' Onore" performed at the Florentine Theatre. Pupil of his father, ALESSANDRO, and also of Gasparini and Greco, Scarlatti remodeled Polaroli's opera "Irene" for Naples in 1704, then visited Venice, met Handel, whose sincere friend he became, and accompanied him to Rome, where he obtained the favour of Cardinal Ottoboni, and held the trial of skill with Handel already mentioned. In 1709 he became composer to Queen Marie Casimire of Poland, for whom he composed the operas "Sylvia," "Ifigenia in Aulide" and "In Tauride." In 1715 he became chapelmaster of St. Peter's, and four years later visited London, Lisbon, and Madrid. Highly successful as a musician, his habits as a gambler caused him to leave his family in poverty. B. Oct. 26, 1684, Naples; d. 1757, Naples. Francesco composed church music and cantatas; was chapelmaster at Palermo, 1689-1715; brother of ALESSANDRO. Giuseppe composed "Merope," Rome, 1740; "Adriano in Siria," Naples, 1752; "Ezio," Naples, 1754; "L'Isola disabitata," 1757, Vienna; and many other dramatic works. Tappert, theory, he was first 'cellist in Liebig's "Concert Orchestra," 1875, then held a similar post in Hamburg, then became assistant to, and later successor to, his brother KARL at the Gewandhaus and Leipsic Conservatory; joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as first 'cello, 1880, was an original member of the Kneisel Quartette, and in 1908, one of the founders of the HESS-SCHRÖDER QUARTETTE. B. June 15, 1855, Neuhaldensleben, Magdeburg; add. New York. Franz played viola, and with the three brothers above named organized the Schröder Quartette, 1871.

Schröder-Devrient (Wilhelmine) sang sop. in opera, ranking with the foremost German artists of all time; debut as "Pamina" in "Zauberflöte," Vienna, 1821, and thereafter distinguishing herself as "Agathe" in "Freischütz" under Von Weber's direction, and as "Fidelio" on the last and highly successful revival of that work, attended by the composer. In 1823 she received 2000 thalers from the Dresden opera, and commanded $500 an appearance later in her career in London, where she was an especial favourite from 1832. Her Wagnerian rôles included Adriano Colonna, which she created, Senta, and Venus, and her last appearance took place in Riga as Romeo, 1848, although she appeared at the Gewandhaus in concert, 1856. Pupil of her father, Friedrich, who had sung the name part in "Don Giovanni" when first produced in German, and who died, 1818, she inherited a talent for acting from her mother, born Antoinette Sophie Bürger, a talented tragedienne, and in childhood joined the forces of the Hofburg Theatre, Vienna. B. Dec. 6, 1804; m. Karl Devrient, the actor, 1824; divorced him, 1828; m. Herr von Doring; divorced him, and in 1850 m. Herr von Bock, of Livonia; d. Jan. 21, 1860, Coburg.

Schröter (Corona Elizabeth Wilhelmine) composed two books of songs; was court singer at Weimar from 1776, and created the rôle of "Iphigénie" in Goethe's play, and composed the music for "Die Fischerin"; pupil of her father, Johann Friedrich, who was oboist at Warsaw. Her acquaintance with Goethe began 1766. B. Jan. 14, 1751, Guben; d. Aug. 23, 1802, Ilmenau. Johann Heinrich composed duos for violin and for violin and 'cello; played violin; brother of CORONA E. W. Johann Samuel played 'cello; toured in early life with his father, sister, and brother, then settled in London, where he married one of his pupils, and retired on receiving $2500 per annum to consent to an annulment of the marriage. In 1782 he became music master to the Queen in succession to J. C. Bach, and published six harpsichord sonatas, and later six concertos and other chamber music. B. 1750, Warsaw; brother of CORONA E. W.; d. Nov. 2, 1788.

Schroeter (Leonard) composed "Hymni Sacri," Erfurt, 1587, at a time when certain of the Latin hymns were still permitted in the Lutheran service; became Cantor of Magdeburg Cathedral in succession to Gallus Dressler, 1564. B. Torgau; d. after 1600.

Schubart (Christian Friedrich Daniel) composed a Salve Regina and clavier pieces; founded the Mannheim "Deutsche Chronik," 1744, later known as "Vaterlands-Chronik"; wrote on musical aesthetics, and his biography, while in prison. B. 1739, Obersonthem, Swabia; d. Oct. 10, 1791.

Schubert (Franz Peter) was the world's greatest composer of songs, practically the creator of the art song, and one of the most prolific as well as one of the greatest of all composers in every form. Son of a Moravian peasant schoolmaster who had married a cook in Vienna, by name Elizabeth Vitz, a Silesian woman, Franz was one of 14 children. Habits of industry were forced upon the whole family by necessity, but the father was determined his children should have the best educational advantages he could obtain. Accordingly Franz was in childhood the violin pupil of Michael Holzer, choirmaster of the parish church at Lichtenthal and, his master said, "soon had harmony at his fingers' ends." He developed a lovely soprano voice which gained him entrance to the Convict in Vienna, where choristers were trained for the Imperial Chapel, and were given the rudiments of an education, provided with an attractive uniform, well fed and well lodged. An orchestra composed of the pupils practiced daily the works of the master composers, and the boys were encouraged to attempt composition, which was only possible to Schubert through the generosity of his fellow pupil Spaun, who gave him the music paper which Schubert was too poor to buy. Schubert's first symphony was composed at sixteen, but he was already author of a number of fantasias, some songs, and an overture. Unfortunately the discipline of the Convict was far from strict, and the boy was permitted to pursue his studies in a desultory manner, so that when his voice broke in 1813 he was unable to stand the examination which would have given him a scholarship.

The year before Schubert's mother had passed away and his father having remarried, the boy found conditions at home far from pleasant. To avoid military service he qualified at the Normal School for the post of schoolmaster, and for three years he was his father's assistant; but his heart was never in this work, and he spent most of his time with music. Salieri aided him in the study of composition, and when in his eighteenth year Schubert had begun to compose with that extraordinary facility which was his characteristic in after life; thus in a single day he composed eight songs, including "Der Erlkönig," and a total of 144 songs between his seventeenth and eighteenth birthdays. He took advantage of opportunities afforded at this period to hear the best concerts, and conceived a lasting and earnest admiration for both Mozart and Beethoven. His first mass, that in F, written between May 17 and July 22, 1814, which some critics rank next to the great Beethoven mass in C, was performed by his old teacher Holzer in the Lichtenthal Parish Church. Then he began the composition of dramatic pieces, always hampered by the lack of a good libretto, and composed four other masses; but being unable to obtain a living from his art in Vienna, sought unsuccessfully to secure the directorship of a music school at Laybach. In 1818, and again in 1824, Schubert spent his summer at Zelësz, Hungary, as teacher in the family of Count Esterhazy, where his surroundings were delightful in all respects, but where he none the less complained of loneliness. During the remainder of his short life Schubert lived a Bohemian existence, having no assured income at any time, sometimes sharing the room of his friend Franz von Schober or such other of his boon companions as might be temporarily in funds; but from first to last he was underpaid by his publishers, unappreciated by the general public, and practically unknown either to the higher grade of musical society or to the court circles which had at once starved and petted

Mozart, and had tolerated the brusqueness of Beethoven. Through the friendship of Michael Vogl, a popular tenor, Schubert's songs came to get a hearing, and gradually the publishers were willing to buy them, but at prices which in these days seem ridiculously low. The celebrated "Winterreise" series of songs brought him an average of twenty cents apiece, his dramatic works brought practically nothing, and a heap of manuscripts found after his death which kept the publishers busy for more than a decade, making the fortunes of several houses, were valued in the inventory at about two dollars. "Die Zwillingbrüder," his farce, was produced at the Kärnthnerthor Theatre, 1820, but failed after the sixth performance; his serious opera "Alphonso und Estrella" was found too difficult by the musicians who undertook to rehearse it in 1822 at Graz, and was not actually performed until Liszt brought it out in 1854, and his music to "Rosamunde," while well received on its production at the Theater-an-der-Wien, was withdrawn after the second performance. Of his many symphonies the best were not performed during the composer's lifetime. In 1826, when the composer was at the height of such small fame as he attained in life, he received a matter of 200 florins for the seven songs from the "Lady of the Lake," published by Artaria, and 300 florins or about $60 for the violin sonata in D, Op. 53, and the "Divertissement à la Hongroise," Op. 54. More than any other composer Schubert possessed the art of writing melody which should blend completely with the spirit of a song, and he was gifted with a fine discriminating taste in the matter of poetry. More than one hundred poets are represented in a group of 600 songs which he composed; and of these he selected for his purposes 72 songs by Goethe, 54 by Schiller, 48 by Mayrhofer, 44 by Müller, 25 by Hölty, 27 by Matthisson, 20 by Kosegarten; the other poets represented being Schlegel, Klopstock, Körner, Schober, Seidl, Salis, Claudius, Walter Scott, Rellstab, Uz, Ossian, Heine, Shakespeare,

Pope, and Cibber. The judgment of the musical world fully confirms the estimate of Liszt, "Schubert was the most poetic musician that ever lived." Such songs as "Der Erlkönig," "Die Junge Nonne," "Der Doppelgänger," "Der Todt und das Mädchen," to name but a few of the most familiar, are ample proof of this. Schubert's habits of composition were well defined. As a rule he composed or studied from six to seven hours until two in the afternoon, when, if he had as much as fifteen cents he would dine at a gasthaus (and there were days when he had not this amount) or sometimes with a friend or patron. During the afternoon he either enjoyed long walks or spent the next few hours with music at the home of a friend, and usually by five o'clock he could again be found in his favourite tavern. He could hardly have drunk to excess on his income even if the creation of more than a thousand works in music in less than eighteen years were not proof at once of industry and of reasonable sobriety. His earliest appearance in good company at a concert was on the occasion of Salieri's Jubilee, where the short cantata written and composed by Schubert as Salieri's pupil was performed. His only public honour was membership in the Vienna Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, which elected him a member of its representative body in 1827. Of his numerous compositions for piano the "Moments Musicaux" and "Impromptus" are known to every concert goer. His chamber music includes the notable quartets in A minor, D minor, and G major, the piano sonatas in G, A minor, and B flat, while his great symphony in C major and the symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," were each sufficient to rank him with the world's foremost composers. In 1829 Schubert made his only notable appearance at a concert of his own work in the hall of the Musik Verein, the net receipts being $160. At this time he was living with his friend Schober at the "Blaue Igel" (Blue Hedgehog). Overwork and under-nourishment had combined to wreck a constitution originally robust. He complained of giddiness and rushes of blood to the head, and although he continued his labours and maintained his usual cheerfulness when with his boon companions, his illness became more serious and his attacks more frequent. On Sept. 11, 1828, he took to his bed, and although it was not certain his disease was not infectious, such friends as Spaun, Huttenbrenner, Bauernfeld, and Randhartinger continued to visit him. His illness finally developed into a malignant typhus, and in the delirium in which he passed away he raved about Beethoven, whom he had met but once in his life, and of whom he had then been mortally frightened. Ferdinand Schubert, oldest brother and his best beloved relation, was present at the end. His whole effects as shown by the official inventory, and including the precious manuscript already mentioned, were valued at $12.50. The remains were interred at Währing, near the grave of Beethoven, but in 1888 were removed to the central cemetery of Vienna, along with those of Beethoven, and tablets now adorn the houses in which he was born, in which he lived, and where he died; and in 1872 the Männergesang Verein of Vienna unveiled a monument to him in the Stadt park which cost 42,000 florins. Schumann (Robert Alexander) composed choral settings of Byron's "Manfred," Moore's "Paradise and the Peri," the opera "GENOVEVA," "Scenes from Goethe's "Faust," songs comparable to those of Schubert, whom he greatly admired; the greatest of piano quintets, four symphonies, piano music of the best type; aspired to be the greatest pianist of his generation, but so crippled his hand by a rash experiment that he was obliged to renounce this career; became the greatest of music critics among composers, and the greatest composer among music critics. Son of Friedrich August Gottlob Schumann, a book seller, and his wife, Johanna Christiana, born Schnabel, the future composer was inducted into the mysteries of authorship at 14, helping his father in writing a biographical work. After some lessons in music from the town trumpeter of Zwickau, he studied piano with J. G. Kuntzsch, organist of the Marienkirche, but although he had begun to compose at seven, until ten years later, when he entered Leipzig University, his opportunities of acquiring a working knowledge of music were very limited. He had begun the study of law in deference to his mother's wishes, and he professed to resume that study a year later at Heidelberg, but devoted the greater part of his time to music, and to the poems of Sonnenberg, Byron, and especially to the sentimentalities of Jean Paul. For seven hours daily he practiced at the piano, and was cordially received on his single appearance in Heidelberg as a concert pianist. In 1830, having overcome his mother's aversion toward music as a profession, Schumann left Heidelberg for Leipzig, where he had already formed the acquaintance of Wieck. Living in the home of this talented musician, the young man received piano lessons from his host, studied theory with Dorn, and in course of time fell madly in love with Wieck's daughter Clara, who later became his wife, and the most skilful of interpreters of his piano compositions. Hardly a year had elapsed when an appliance he had invented to hold the third finger motionless while practicing with the rest permanently injured that finger, and for a time crippled his whole hand. Then it was that he gave himself up to creative work. Up to his 21st year his most important compositions had been a few songs, some of which were to his own verses; but he soon attempted a piano concerto, which was never completed, and a symphony in G. Clara Wieck, then a child of 13, played the first movement of the symphony on the piano, Nov. 18, 1832, at Zwickau, arousing immediate interest both in the composer and herself. Schumann divided his time between Zwickau and Leipzig for several years, cultivating his powers of expression as composer and author, and maturing his plans for the publication of a musical journal. In 1834 he began to issue the "Neue Zeitschrift für Musik" at Leipzig, and soon became proprietor of this journal, and continued to edit it for the next ten years, and using the power thus gained to aid Chopin, Berlioz, Brahms, and other musicians in their fight for recognition. It was in his journal, the power of which can hardly be appreciated in these days of standardized periodicals, that he created that imaginary "Dav-idsbundler" with which to make war on the Philistines of art. As an editor and critic he was generally sound in his views, always fair, always unselfish, prone to enthusiasm, and actuated by the noblest ideals. The "Carnaval" and the "Études Symphoniques" were begun in 1834, but were laid aside temporarily because of the press of literary work, but from 1836 to 1839, during which time Schumann was sole editor of the "Neue Zeitschrift," date many of his best piano works, including the F minor sonata, "Kreisleriana," "Fantasiestücke," the Fantasia, Op. 17, the "Davidsbundler-tanze," and "Humoresque." Mendelssohn, David, Moscheles, and other notable musicians of the period were to be found at Wieck's house, and Schumann, although of a retiring and taciturn nature, mingled freely in this congenial society. In 1835 he had awakened to his love for Clara Wieck, and two years later formally asked her hand; but Wieck, who may have suspected Schumann's fragile mental temperament, opposed their union, and put him off as long as possible. In 1838 he removed the "Neue Zeitschrift" to Vienna, publishing it in that city for a short time, but soon returning to Leipzig. Wieck remained obdurate regarding the marriage of his daughter to Schumann, but the young people were equally bent upon it, and Schumann instituted a law suit which resulted in a decree in his favour, and on Sept. 12, 1840, they were married in Schoenefeld, near Leipzig. His love for this gifted pianist seems to have been his chief inspiration, and for the next four years he composed with greater facility and in greater quantity than ever, and dedicated to his wife the great piano quintet, which was first performed, Jan. 8, 1843, at the Gewandhaus, the composer's wife at the piano. This composition was the first to win universal acknowledgment of the composer's merit throughout Europe. "Paradise and the Peri," and the music for "Faust" date from the same year. In 1844 he resigned the editorship of the "Neue Zeitschrift," but taught in the Leipzig

Conservatory, newly founded by his friend Mendelssohn; accompanied his wife on her Russian tour, and then abandoned Leipzig for Dresden, where he lived in seclusion, attempting to overcome an attack of severe nervous exhaustion. There he was on good terms with Wagner, and there he composed his C major symphony, Op. 60, and in 1847 began work on the opera "Genèveva." He abandoned the use of recitative in this work, and when it was produced under his own direction, June 25, 1850, at Leipzig, it proved a failure. The "Faust" music, which he had at length completed, had been well received, however, and Schumann, far from discouragement, manifested renewed activity. "Manfred," his next most important work, was given with stage setting in 1852 by Liszt at Weimar, and he busied himself with piano works, and the E flat symphony "Rhenish," and with "The Pilgrimage of the Rose," and other vocal pieces. In 1850 Schumann became chapelmaster at Düsseldorf in succession to Hiller, and removed to that city, where he conducted the Lower Rhine festival of 1853. He had never been especially gifted as a conductor, and failing health soon necessitated his retirement from all such strenuous tasks. Almost his last act of importance to the musical world was to write an earnest commendation of Brahms in the "Neue Zeitschrift," Oct. 18, 1853. In 1854, while in a fit of mental depression, the composer threw himself into the Rhine, and although he was rescued by some boatmen, he was thereafter an inmate of an asylum at Endernich, near Bonn. He survived two years more, and had occasional lucid intervals, during which he gladly received his friends and relatives, but as a musician, his career was at an end. More fortunate than many of the great composers in having never known want, Schumann was especially happy in his family life, and was a man of unusual culture in many lines. As a literary man he was chiefly interested in music, and it is in his own writings, and in the collections of letters, that he may be studied to the best advantage. B. June 8, 1810, Zwickau, Saxony; d. July 29, 1856. Daughter and pupil of Frederick WIECK, she began the study of music in infancy, and made her debut at nine as a pianist, in Leipsic, and in 1832 at the Gewandhaus. The circumstances of her marriage are sufficiently set forth in the notice of her husband, with whose work her life was closely associated until his death

(he expired in her arms), although they had been occasionally separated during her concert engagements. After Schumann's death she lived for a time in Berlin with her mother, then the wife of Bargiel; but while living in Baden-Baden from 1863, she was engaged during the season in touring every part of Europe, being everywhere well received. Schütz (Heinrich) composed dramatic cantatas to sacred texts in which, as in the works of Carissimi, are the germ of the oratorio; studied the monodic style made popular in Italy by Monteverde, and applied it to his opera "Dafne," now lost, which had originally been intended as an adaptation of Peri's work, but included compositions of Schütz's as well; happily blended in his work a profound knowledge of polyphony with the harmonic methods of the Italian renaissance, producing sacred and secular works 100 years before the time of Bach and Handel along the lines on which they subsequently worked. In 1599 he was chorister in the chapel of the Landgraf of Hesse-Cassel, and when his voice broke, began the study of law, but his musical talents were so pronounced that, in 1609, he was sent to Venice at the expense of his master, to become a pupil of Giovanni Gabrieli. Two years later, his first publication, a book of five-part madrigals dedicated to the Landgraf, appeared in Venice, and in 1612 he was again in Hesse-Cassel as court organist. In 1614 he became chapelmaster to the Elector of Saxony at 400 gulden per annum. Although his relations with the Landgraf continued for several years, he was at last firmly attached to Dresden, where he conducted and managed the opera, and where, in 1619, he issued a collection of psalms for full choir with soli and orchestra. An oratorio on the Resurrection, in 1623, and "Cantiones Sacrae" for four voices and organ, show still further development toward modern ideals. "Dafne" was arranged and composed for the marriage of the Princess Sophie of Saxony to the Landgraf of Hesse-Darmstadt, and was performed at Torgau, April 13, 1627, and is ranked as the first German opera. In 1638 he composed the ballet "Orpheus und Euridice," for the wedding of Johann Georg II, of Saxony, but the composer does not appear to have thereafter attempted dramatic forms, the death of his wife inclining him to sacred music. He composed a four-part setting of Becker's German Psalter, and during a second visit to Italy, 1629, brought out his "Symphoniae Sacrae," of which three parts had appeared up to 1650, the last containing the dramatic cantatas already referred to. In 1633 he visited the court of Copenhagen, and traveled through the German states for the next eight years, then settled in Dresden again, and in 1645 published his Passion on "Die 7 Worte Christi am Kreuz," next his "Musicalia ad Chorum Sacrum," 1648. Toward the close of his career, he returned with renewed affection to the polyphonic style, and the four Passions, which are the most notable product of his later period were for voices alone. B. Oct. 8, 1585, Köstritz, Saxony; d. Nov. 6, 1672, Dresden. See biography by the Spittas, 1886. The first act, entitled "The Woman," opens in St. Petersburg. Stephana, a "beautiful oriental," has been passed on by the villainous Gleby to Prince Alexis, who has installed her in a luxurious palace. Nikona, Stephana's confidential servant, has a godson, Lieutenant Vassili, with whom Stephana falls in love, and often meets, but in such disguise that he believes her to be a simple working girl. On the eve of departing for war, the young lieutenant calls to bid his godmother farewell, learns for the first time who Stephana really is, but still loves her. When Prince Alexis enters, he provokes a combat and runs the Prince through the body with his sword. The police enter, and Vassili is arrested. The second act, called "The Lover," transpires on the Russo-Siberian border, where a convoy of prisoners bound for the Siberian mines soon appears. Vassili, condemned for his crime and wearied with the long march, is overcome with despair. Women and children wail their farewells to the men whom they will see no more, but as the convoy prepares to resume the road, a sleigh races into sight. Stephana, who has come to join her lover in exile, is rapturously greeted, declines to listen to his plea that she will leave him alone in his misery, and together they follow the prisoners into exile. The third act, called "The Heroine," takes place in the convict camp at the Siberian mines. It is Easter Eve, and amid the festivities which are permitted even in prison on that day, Stephana and Vassili are plotting their escape. Gleby, who has at last fallen into the toils of justice, is brought among the convicts of whom he is to be one thereafter. Recognizing Stephana he insults her, and Vassili is only prevented from chastising him by the bystanders. Then the church bell peals forth the call to prayer, and the prisoners fall to their knees. When night falls, Stephana and Vassili escape, but Gleby, who has heard of their plan, betrays them. An alarm is sounded, guards start in pursuit of the prisoners, shots are heard, and a moment later the prison officials return, dragging Vassili, and carrying Stephana, who has been mortally wounded, on a litter. Stephana utters a farewell and dies, leaving Vassili alone indeed. Russian colour is given the work by the introduction of the National hymn, the folksong "Ay Ouchnem," which has long been a favourite with the Volga rivermen, and an earlier Russian strain which also occurs in the scherzo of the second of Beethoven's string quartets dedicated to Rasoumoffsky.

The story is taken from the Eddas, and is that which Wagner, drawing his legend from a similar source, but modifying it to suit his fancy, developed in "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung," the latter music dramas in the RING DES NIBELUNGEN. The action opens in Gunther's palace, where Hilda, Gunther's sister, relates her dream to Uta, her nurse, and a group of women who are sewing battle standards. Uta interprets this dream to mean that Hilda's future husband will be killed by a jealous rival. Hilda, who is intended by her brother for Attila, King of the Huns, is thereupon moved to confess her love for Sigurd, and the nurse promises to give him a potion which will cause her passion to be returned. Gunther welcomes messengers from Attila, who describes the charms of Brunehild, whom they report to be asleep in a rocky fastness surrounded by fire. Gunther determines to win Brunehild. A moment later he, urging his sister to marry the King of the Huns, when Sigurd enters, accepts the magic potion from Hilda which Uta has prepared, and falls in love with Hilda. Gunther agrees to give him Hilda if he will aid in winning Brunehild. Priests are leading the worship of Odin and Freja in the second act, when Gunther, Hagen, and Sigurd enter, bent on capturing Brunehild. This deed can only be accomplished, say the priests, by one who had never known love, and Sigurd, therefore, alone is qualified. After an invocation to Hilda, Sigurd blows a horn which the priests have given him, and then sees three Norns, washing a shroud, which they tell him is his. Unmoved by fear or the voluptuous temptations by which he is next surrounded, Sigurd, seeing Brunehild's palace in the distance, plunges into a lake of fire by which it is surrounded, and safely reaches the sleeping beauty, who at once awakes and proffers him her love. Faithful to Gunther, Sigurd leads her away, his drawn sword between them. In the third act, Hilda and Uta, in Gunther's garden, hear Sigurd proclaim his victory. Brunehild, who has been conveyed to the garden while sleeping, is awakened by Gunther, and mistaking him for Sigurd, accepts his protestations of love. Hagen announces the coming nuptials to the people, and then Sigurd appears, claiming Hilda as his reward. Gunther agrees, and bids Brunehild join their hands, but as she touches Sigurd, both feel that their hands are burning. Brunehild in the next act is represented as having some mysterious malady which frightens people away from her. The fact is she is desperately in love with Sigurd, and prays that Odin will release her from this misery by death. Hilda comes to comfort her, wearing a girdle which Brunehild recognizes as having been taken from her by Sigurd, and then she realizes that she has been tricked into a marriage with the wrong man. She dispels the effect of Uta's love potion, and instantly Sigurd loves her. Sigurd and Gunther go hunting, and his death is agreed upon, but Hilda, who informs Brunehild of the plot, offers to save Sigurd if Brunehild will renounce him forever. While Brunehild hesitates, Sigurd is murdered. The body is brought in, and Brunehild mounts the funeral pyre, and as the flames burst out, the celestial voices are heard chanting "The heavens are opening for them."

Singing is the act of producing musical tone by means of the voice. No instrument invented by man possesses at once the power of producing a complete scale ranging from the highest to the lowest musical sounds the average human ear is capable of distinguishing, with all intermediate tones, every shade and inflection of expression together with articulate speech; but since the voice does all these things, such instruments as those of the violin family which approximate the perfection of the voice in all matters save articulation, are sometimes said to sing. Considered as an instrument, the voice is as much superior to any other apparatus for the production of musical tone as the natural beauty of the diamond is superior to that of any artificial imitation; but as an instrument, the organs of the voice are wonderful in their complexity. The entire respiratory system is involved in the act of singing, and the tone is produced precisely on the principle of the reed organ pipe. Naturally the first thing in importance is the wind supply. The lungs may be compared to an organ bellows. The muscular control of the diaphragm and of the ribs, whereby the lungs are inflated and the air expired is of primary importance since, as in the case of the organ pipe, the quality of the tone is dependent on the steady and uniform control of the wind supply. From the lungs the air is forced through the trachea or wind pipe past the vocal mechanism of the larynx. According to the theories generally accepted, vibration is set up by the action of the air on the vocal chords, which are small ridges of cartilage set in muscular tissue, covered with a delicate mucous membrane, and capable of altering the size and shape of the aperture through which the air must pass, or of closing it altogether. The form of the vocal chords varies with age and with sex, but in all cases they determine the number of vibrations of the air column, and consequently its pitch. From the larynx upward the air passage resembles the "speaking part" of the organ pipe. The tone is again modified in quality and in pitch by the shape of the mouth and by the nasal passages, which act together as resonators and finally by the position of the tongue and of the lips in articulation. Under the title VOICE will be found the classification of the distinctive varieties of male and female singing voices according to compass, and the pitch and special qualities of each of these subdivisions is described under its proper head. The instinct to sing is quite as natural and hardly less common than the instinct to speak. The ancients limited the oratorical voice, however, to five whole tones, while the singing voice has a range of from ten tones to two or even three octaves. Doubtless the art of singing, fostered by the church, reached its highest perfection in the golden age of polyphony which culminated in Palestrina, and was thence passed on to the great opera singers of the 17th and 18th centuries, whose skill has not been improved on by modern methods. Singing had therefore reached perfection as an art before Garcia's invention of the laryngoscope made possible its comprehension as a science. Many things contributed to aid Italian singers in maintaining their primacy in the vocal art. The climate is such that the delicate mechanism of the voice is easily kept in order, and more important still, the language, by reason of the preponderance of vowel sounds, is more singable than the tongues of Northern Europe. But while the instinct to sing is common, and the possession of sound vocal organs equally so, no one can sing well who does not possess an accurate sense of pitch, and this is by no means common. In addition the great artist must also possess a highly emotional temperament, or the effort to awaken emotion in others must fail. Singing therefore makes such unusual demands on the individual that, while every man and woman is born into the world with the greatest of all instruments at command, the great singer will always be even more rare than the great instrumentalist.

Sistine Choir is the popular English name of Il Collegio dei Cappellani Cantori della Cappella Pontifica at Rome, the oldest and best of the world's church choirs, which consisted in 1908 of 32 choral chaplains, whose duty it was to assist the Supreme Pontiff wherever he might officiate in person. St. Sylvester, 314-35, established the first school in Rome for the training of choristers, and St. Hilarius, 461-68 a second. The Order of St. Benedict, which had founded a seminary in Rome, was intrusted with the training of choristers by St. GREGORY THE GREAT, 590-604, from which time the history of the pontifical choir has been continuous. During that period when the See of Peter was removed to Avignon, the local papal choir numbered 12 singers, 1305-77, but the Roman organization remained intact and at home, governed by a primicerius, who was always a churchman of high rank, aided by a secundicerius who usually succeeded him. On the return to Rome of Pope Gregory XI, the two choirs were united. The Roman singers had previously been collectively known as the Schola Cantorum, but the united organizations were thenceforth called Collegio dei Cappellani Cantori, and governed by a Maestro della Cappella Pontifica, an ecclesiastic of high rank who held office for life. From 1469 this post was held by 14 bishops, including GENET of Carpentras, but in 1586 Pope Sixtus V empowered the college to elect the maestri from their own number, and G. A. Merlo was the first to be so chosen. Elections were thereafter held annually, and the office usually fell to the primo basso. With the sojourn in Avignon began the supremacy of the Netherland singers and composers, of whom DUFAY was the most important. The combined choirs possessed 24 voices, but in the 16th century the number was increased to 32, where it has since remained. To compensate PALESTRINA for his troubles with the singers, Pope Pius IV made him composer to the pontifical chapel, 1565, a distinction conferred after his death on Felice ANERIO, but never thereafter. With Palestrina church music and the manner of performing it reached their highest development, and at this period the Sistine Choir may be said to have crystallized. NANINI, BAI, BAINI, to mention a few of the most distinguished members of the choir, have composed for it, but the earlier traditions have been preserved intact. From the fourth century the singers were trained in schools expressly for their functions in connection with the liturgy, supplying both sop. and con. voices for many Roman churches as well, and on the breaking of their voices being placed either in the seminaries or in secular life, as seemed best. Boys' voices were first replaced by falsetto singers imported from Spain in the 16th century, and these in turn gave way before the castrati, who for the next two centuries supplied both church and stage with high voices. The church vigorously condemned the practice by which these voices were produced, while not refusing to avail itself of those which were the result of accident. Finally the necessary operation was prohibited by civil authority on pain of death, which, added to the ipso facto excommunication of the church, ended such atrocities. Of late years the Sistine Choir has contained a number of natural male sopranos, but the majority of the high voices were supplied from the Scuola di S. Salvatore, a matrise which supplied all the churches in Rome.

Sonnambula. Vincenzo Bellini's two-act opera, to book by Romani, was first performed Mar. 6, 1831, at La Scala, Milan. The original cast consisted of: Amina, sop.; Mme. Pasta; Elvino, Rubini, ten.; Rodolfo, Mariano, bar.; Lisa, Mme. Poccani, sop.; Amina, the orphan ward of Teresa, wife of the miller in a Swiss village, is on the point of marrying Elvino, a wealthy peasant. Lisa, who keeps the inn, also loves Elvino, while Alessio, a peasant boy, is smitten with love of the landlady. Rodolfo comes upon the scene and promptly makes love to Amina to the great displeasure of Elvino. Rodolfo, who is really the lord of a neighbouring village, but is incognito, is warned by peasants that the inn is haunted. The ghost is really Amina, who is a sonnambulist. Rodolfo goes to his room and is in the midst of a pleasant flirtation with Lisa when the sleeping Amina walks into the room. Lisa hides in a closet, Rodolfo quietly leaves the room, and the unconscious Amina retires to rest. Lisa then hurries off, forgetting her handkerchief as she goes, and returns with Amina's jealous lover, who rushes in at the head of a crowd of villagers, and, finding his betrothed asleep in the stranger's room, promptly denounces her, although the villagers maintain her innocence, and offers to marry Lisa. In the second act Amina, again walking in her sleep, steps from the window of the mill and crosses safely a slender bridge which threatens to break at any moment, and when she reaches the ground is clasped in the arms of the now repentant Elvino, who, with the villagers, has trembled at her feat, and had already been convinced of her faithfulness by the discovery of Lisa's handkerchief in Rodolfo's room. The marriage of Elvino and Amina follows. The principal musical numbers are: Act I. "Sovra il sen," Amina; "Vi ravviso," Rodolfo; "Mai più dubbi!" Amina and Elvino; "Osservatte, l'uscio e aprito," village chorus; "O mio dolor." Act II. "Tutto è sciolto," Elvino; "Ah! non giunge," Amina.

After successful engagements in Paris and London, she returned to Berlin, and soon married Count Rossi, of the Sardinian legation. To sanction this union officially, the King of Prussia ennobled her in her own right as "von Launstein." For a time she retired, her domestic life being exceptionally happy, but the loss of her husband's fortune made it necessary for her to return to opera, and she sang in London and Paris, and made a highly successful tour of the United States, 1852, and extended her journey into Mexico, where she was attacked with cholera. He compiled "National Patriotic and Typical Airs of all Countries" while in government employ, and thereafter became the author of a popular novel, numerous essays, and instruction books for violin, drum, trumpet, etc. Resigning in 1892, he organized the military band which had repeatedly toured the world under his direction, and devoted more time to composition. The most successful of his comic operas were "El Capitan," to his own book, "The Bride Elect," "The Charlatan," "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp." Spohr (Louis) composed concertos for violin of which Nos. 7, 8, and 9 are still admired, the opera, "JES-SONDA," and nine others, more than 200 works in all forms; was among the greatest of violinists and one of the best conductors of his generation; a wretched music critic, since he condemned the greatest of Beethoven's works, but an excellent teacher and the author of a standard "Violin School" in three parts. Son of a physician who was an excellent amateur, and of a mother who sang and played piano, young Spohr began to play violin at five, and shortly afterwards composed his first violin duos. During his school days in Brunswick he studied violin with Kunisch and theory with Hartung, and played a concerto of his own at a school concert which led to his first appearance with the ducal band, and to lessons from Maucourt, its concertmeister. At 14, he made his first concert tour, with considerable success. The Duke of Brunswick placed him with Franz Eck, with whom he travelled in Russia and Germany. Returning to Brunswick, he played in the ducal orchestra, making occasional tours, and playing with Meyerbeer in Berlin, then a lad of 13, but losing a Guarnerius which had been given him by a Russian admirer, while on his way to Paris, and in consequence abandoning that journey. He was concertmeister at Gotha from 1805, and there met the harpist Dorette Scheidler, who became his wife. Routine work, concert tours and composing occupied his time until 1812, when he settled in Vienna as conductor of the Theatre an der Wien. It was during this sojourn in Vienna, which continued three years, that he came in contact with Beethoven, and expressed the opinion that the chorale of the Ninth Symphony was "monstrous and tasteless." After a quarrel with the Vienna managers, he resumed his tours, and in 1818 settled in Frankfort as conductor of the opera, and there produced his operas "Faust," and "Azor und Zemire." Two years later he made his first appearance in London, where he conducted two of his own symphonies, at the Philharmonic concerts, using the baton, then new to England, and achieving a general artistic and financial success. Then he visited Paris, but was better received by musicians than the public, settled for a time in Dresden, and, through Weber's influence, became court chapel-master at Cassel, where he remained for life. "Jessonda," produced at Cassel, 1823, soon made the round of the German opera houses, and he conducted his oratorio, "The Last Judgment," at the Düsseldorf (Rhenish) festival of 1826, in 1831 completed his "Violin School," and the following year produced his symphony "Die weihe der Töne," Op. 86, The Consecration of Sound. His oratorio "Des Heiland's letzte Stunden," ("Calvary") was inspired by the death of his wife, 1834, but two years later he consoled himself by marrying the pianist, Marianne Pfeiffer. In 1839 he again visited London and produced his "Calvary" at the Norwich Festival, where its enthusiastic reception led to his receiving a commission to compose "The Fall of Babylon," for the festival of 1842. While at Cassel he had produced "Der Fliegende Holländer," 1842, and "Tannhäuser," 1853, and had tried in vain to put on "Lohengrin," thus evincing his early admiration for Wagner, and had raised the reputation of the court musical organizations, but his frequent visits to other cities and his inclination to meddle in politics raised a cabal against him, and he was retired on pension, 1857. A few months later he broke his arm and was forced to abandon his violin, and his last appearance in public took place in Prague, 1858, when he conducted his "Jessonda," at the Conservatory semi-centennial. Besides the works already mentioned, Spohr composed eight overtures, 15 violin concertos, (the 8th, A minor, Op. 47, known as "In modo d'una scena cantante"), a mass with orchestra, the dramatic cantata "Das Be-freite Deutschland," nine symphonies, of which the most important are: "Historical," No. 6, in G, Op. 116, dedicated to the London Philharmonic Society; "Irdisches und Göttliches im Menschenleben," No. 7 in C, Op. 121 for double orchestra; No. 8, G minor, Op. 137; No. 9, "Die Jahreszeiten" (The Seasons), B minor, Op. 143; a quartet concerto for double string quartet, two concertantes for two violins with orchestra, two clarinet concertos, the operas "Der Zweikampf mit der Geliebten," "Der Alchymist," "Die Kreuzfahrer," "Der Berggeist," many part-songs, songs and much chamber music. B. April 5, 1784, Brunswick; d. Oct. 22, 1859, Cassel. See Autobiography, lives by Malibran, 1860, and H. M. Schletterer, 1881.

Spontini (Gasparo Luigi Pacifico) composed the operas "La Vestale," which won Napoleon's prize as the best work of its kind in a decade, with the approval of Méhul, Gossec, and Grétry, Paris, 1807; "Olympie," which he considered his masterpiece; then secured an appointment at the Prussian court, which he held despite bitter opposition for a score of years; won wealth from princes and the title Count of Sant' Andrea from the Pope, but failed to create anything highly valued to-day. Son of a peasant family, three of his brothers had entered the church, and he, too, was destined for the priesthood, but his love of music, which his parents vainly tried to repress, caused him to run away from home, and he took refuge with an uncle who allowed him to take lessons of Quintiliani. A year later his family took him back, and this time, by advice of the same uncle, who was a priest, who had insisted that young Spontini be prepared for the seminary, he was taken to Naples and placed in the Conservatorio de' Turchini, 1791. There his progress was rapid. The director of the Teatro Argentina, Rome, heard some of Spon-tini's music while in Naples, 1796, and commissioned him to write an opera. "I Puntigli delle Donne" was the result, but the composer, who was then but 18, had absented himself without leave, and it required the intercession of Piccinni to gain him readmission to the conservatory. His next opera, "L'Eroismo ridicolo," Rome, 1797, was composed with the benefit of advice from Piccinni, and showed marked improvement. "Il finto Pittore," 1798, Rome, and three operas produced in Florence, 1798, aroused the interest of the Neapolitans, and his "L'Eroismo ridicolo," was given there during the carnival, and next year expanded to two acts, and performed as "La finta Filosofa," and his "La fuga in maschera" was produced at the carnival of 1800. Spontini had accompanied the court to Palermo on the outbreak of the French Revolution, and there he continued to compose works for the court opera, and for Rome and Venice until 1803, when he settled in Paris. "Julie," and "La petite Maison," composed in the Neapolitan style, were promptly hissed off the boards by the Parisians, but his one act "Milton," Nov. 27, 1804, was better received, and Empress Josephine, to whom the score was dedicated, made him her composer. The book to "Milton," was by Étienne Jouy, who also provided the libretto for "La Vestale," Spontini's next work, and this was finally put in rehearsal at the Opéra in deference to the wishes of Josephine, after Spontini had gained the good will of the public by his cantata "L'Eccelsa Gara," sung at the celebration of the battle of Austerlitz. "Fernand Cortez," was his next opera, and in this Napoleon himself took a personal interest. It proved a great success, Nov. 28, 1809, and won the composer his appointment as conductor of the Italian opera. Quarrels with the direction over money matters caused him to be dismissed, 1812, but two years later the Bourbons returned to power, and Spontini was ready with a "festival opera," "Pelage, ou le Roi de la Paix," and was rewarded with an appointment at court. The ballet music "Dan-aides," was next composed, and then he produced "Olympie," book by Briffaut and Dieulafoy, based on Voltaire's tragedy. The first performance, Dec. 15, 1819, Paris, was not a brilliant success, although it represented four years' work, but the composer had the libretto modified, revised the music, and it was well received in Berlin, May 14, 1821, and after further revision, was again produced with complete success, Paris, Feb. 28, 1826. Meantime, however, negotiations had been pending with Count Brühl, royal intendant for Friedrich Wilhelm of Prussia, looking to the appointment of Spontini as chief chapelmaster and superintendent general of music to that court. In 1820, these negotiations, finally carried on over the Count's head, were brought to a conclusion, and Spontini settled in the German capital with practically supreme power in all matters pertaining to music. He composed the festival play "Lalla Rukh," based on Moore's poem, which was said to have been one of the most brilliant productions ever seen in Berlin, and the following year "Nourmahal," which included some of the music of the earlier work. "Alcindor," 1825, proved a failure, but "Agnes von Hohenstaufen," 1829, was comparable in merit to "Olympie," although it never obtained equal popularity. Spontini was soon at odds with Brühl, with the Mendelssohns, with most of the German musicians, and the Berlin public. He was quick tempered, a foreigner, unable to speak German, and the interest he showed in presenting German masterpieces failed to atone for these facts. The King continued faithful in his admiration and support until his death, 1840, but Friedrich Wilhelm IV was by no means so attached to the composer. In 1841 Spontini was mobbed as he was about to conduct a performance at the Opera House, and never showed his face there again. Then his financial disputes brought him into litigation with the court, and in the autumn his connection with Berlin ended. The new King allowed him to retain his titles and salary, and to live where he pleased, "in the hope that in repose he might produce new works, which the King would hail with pleasure, if he chose to conduct them in person at Berlin." Broken in health and spirit, Spontini returned to Italy, then lived for a time in Paris, and while in Dresden, 1844, conducted a performance of "Vestale," for Wagner, which proved his last public appearance. Toward the close of his life he settled in Jesi, Italy, establishing schools and other useful institutions. Spontini received his title from the Pope in 1844, and was a Dr. Phil., Halle, member of the Prussian Ordre pour le mérite, and of the French Académie and Berlin Akademie. B. Nov. 14, 1774, Majolati, near Jesi; d. Jan. 14, 1851. See biographies by L. de Lomenie, 1841, Montanari, 1851; Raoul-Rochette, 1882.

But when they hear Stradella sing a hymn to the Virgin they throw themselves at his feet, confess their mission, and warn him against Bassi. Leonora enters, finds Bassi and the bravoes converted from their purpose, and the opera ends with a happy reconciliation, although, according to Bonnet-Bourdelot, Bassi had both lovers murdered at Genoa.

Stradivarius (Antonius) perfected the form of the violin, having learned the art of violin making from NICOLO AMATI, and made instruments from 1666 to 1737 which have never been surpassed. 540 violins, 12 violas, and 50 cellos were extant in 1908, the best valued at $10,000 or more, while a hundred more may still be authenticated. The earliest label on a genuine Strad. is said to be "Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis Alumnus Nicolai Amati, Faciebat Anno 1666," with a Maltese cross and the letters A. S. in a double circle. In 1667 he married Francesca Ferraboschi, widow of G. G. Capra, and in 1680 bought the house, No. 1 Piazza Roma, (where his best work was done), for about $4200. This remained in possession of his family for 100 years, and was marked by an inscription set up by the municipality of Cremona. It is assumed that he worked for Amati, seven or eight years prior to 1666, but aside from the register showing the births and deaths of his children, and his second marriage, 1699, to Antonia M. Zambelli, the only certain records of his life are the labels in his instruments. B. about 1644; d. Dec. 17, 1737, Cremona. See "Antonio Stradivari, his Life and Work," W. H., A. F. and A. Hill, London, 1902. Francesco and Omobono were the only sons of ANTONIUS to follow the violin-making craft, and both were sons of the first wife. Francesco was b. Feb. 1, 1671, Cremona; d. May 11, 1743. Omobono, b. Nov. 14, 1679, Cremona; d. June 8, 1742.

Strain. Theme which forms a part and is related to the whole composition. Formerly each portion of a composition, either rhythmical pauses or completed sentences, were divided by the double bar, and consequently the double bar marked the strain. This custom is still followed in writing chants and hymn tunes where the strain is still marked by the double bar.

Strakosch (Maurice) managed the Apollo Theatre, Rome, with his brother MAX; was European agent for his sister-in-law, Adelina PATTI; managed artists and troupes successfully in Europe and America, and the Salle Ventadour, Paris, 1873-74. B. 1825, Lemberg, Moravia; m. Carlotta PATTI; d. Oct. 9, 1887. See his "Memoires." Max was closely associated in business with his brother MAURICE, and usually acted as his American representative. D. Mar. 17, 1892. Maurice was manager of the Baltimore Music Hall, forming an excellent English Opera company, and on its financial failure allied himself with the Metropolitan management in New York, afterwards going into the real estate business in California. Son of MAX.

Straus (Ludwig) played violin and viola; concertmeister, Frankfort Theatre, 1860, the Museum concerts, and from 1864 to 1888 of Hallé's orchestra, Manchester; solo violinist to Queen Victoria, and in earlier life successful in virtuoso tours; played quartet three years with Mayseder; pupil Vienna Conservatory. B. Mar. 28, 1835, Presburg; d. Oct. 23, 1899, Cambridge, Eng.

Strauss (Johann) was the most notable composer and conductor of dance music of his generation, the father of "The Waltz King," and two other sons whose dance music has enlivened the whole world. His parents, who were innkeepers, with a laudable desire of advancing their son in life, had him apprenticed to a bookbinder. He had already learned to play violin, and soon ran away from the shop, but was found by a friend of the family, who obtained lessons for him from Polyschansky, on the violin, and Seyfried, theory. His first engagement was with LANNER, for whom he was assistant conductor until 1825, then beginning his own concerts in a suburban beer garden, the "Schwann," and thereafter at the "Sperl," where he continued six years. Appointed chapelmaster of the Bürger regiment, it became his duty to play at certain of the court balls, and his orchestra, now increased to 200, and his compositions, of which the "Tauberln," Op. 1, and "Kettenbrücke," Op. 19, were the most famous, awakened an interest by no means confined to the Austrian capital. From 1833 he began a series of tours which gradually extended throughout Europe, and in the year of Queen Victoria's coronation, 1838, he gave 72 concerts and played at the most important balls in London. In 1844 he was specially honoured by the future Emperor Wilhelm I, who gave a military concert in his honour, and on his return to Vienna he was appointed conductor of the court balls. In 1840 he introduced the polka to Vienna, and thereafter devoted himself mainly to composing only waltzes, polkas, galops, and marches, of which he produced 60, and quadrilles, of which he composed 34. Breitkopf & Härtel published his complete works, including 246 pieces of dance music, and, in all, 150 waltzes, among which were: Taglioni-Walzer, Londoner Saison-Walzer, Die Berggeister Walzer, Rosenblätter-Walzer, Wiener Gemüths-Walzer, Myrthen Walzer, Tanz-Recepte Walzer, Cäcilien-Walzer, mit dem beliebten Tremolo; Dritte Walzer-Guirlande; Palm-Zweige Walzer; Amors-Pfeile Walzer; Elektrische Funken Walzer; Deutsche Lust, oder Donau-Lieder ohne Text, Walzer; Apollo-Walzer, Adalaiden-Walzer, Die Wettrenner Walzer; Die Debutanten Walzer; Egerien-Tänze; Die Tanzmeister Walzer; Stadt- und Landleben Walzer; Die Phantasten Walzer; Musik-Verein-Tänze, Döblinger Reunion-Walzer, Wiener Carneval-Walzer, Erste Kettenbrücke-Walzer, Gesellschafts-Walzer, Wiener Launen-Walzer, Walzer (à la Paganini), Krapfen-Wald'l-Walzer, Trompeten-Walzer, Champagner-Walzer, Erinnerungs-Walzer, Fort nach einander!-Walzer; Lustlager-Walzer. B. Mar. 4, 1804, Vienna; d. Sept. 25, 1849, Vienna. Johann deserved his title of the "Waltz King" by composing nearly 400 waltzes, of which the most famous were "An der schönen blauen Donau" ("The Blue Danube"), Op. 314, "Man lebt nur einmal," "Wiener Blut," "Künstlerleben," and "Tausend und eine Nacht." Besides his waltzes he composed a notable series of comic operas, including "Die Fledermaus," "Der ZIGEUNER-BARON," the ballet "Aschenbrödel," and "Traumbilder" for orchestra. In accordance with his father's wishes, he had been educated for a commercial career, but his mother, born Streim, an innkeeper's daughter, secretly caused him to be trained in music, and he had composed the "Erster Gedanke" waltz at six. At 19 he could resist his passion for music no longer, and made his debut as conductor, producing waltzes of his own and his father's. On the death of his father he combined the two orchestras, and made a series of tours, was made court conductor of balls at Vienna, 1863, and produced his first operetta, "Indigo und die vierzig Räuber," 1871, Theater an der Wien. Other operettas to be noted: "Der Karneval in Rom," "Cagliostro," "Prinz Methusalem," "Blindekuh," "Das Spitzentuch der Königin," "Die lustige Krieg," "Eine Nacht in Venedig," "Simplicius," "Ritter Pasman," "Fürstin Ninetta," "Jabuka," "Waldmeister," "Die Göttin von Vernunft." B. Oct. 25, 1825, Vienna; son of JOHANN; m. the singer "Jetty" Treffz, 1862, and after her death the singer Angelica Dietrich, 1878; d. June 3, 1899, Vienna. Joseph composed 283 popular waltzes; conducted his own band, but was of feeble constitution, and being maltreated by Russian officers in Warsaw for whom he had refused to play, was fatally injured. B. Vienna, Aug. 22, 1827; brother of the Waltz King; d. July 22, 1870, Warsaw. Eduard composed more than 200 pieces of dance music; became conductor of court balls in St. Petersburg, 1870; toured Europe repeatedly at the head of his own orchestra; visiting America, 1901-2, for which occasion he borrowed his brother's title of "Waltz King"; played in Vienna at the Volksgarten during the summer, and in the winter in the hall of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. B. Feb. 14, 1835; add. Vienna.

Strauss (Richard) composed a series of symphonic poems notable for bizarre construction and eccentricity of subject and orchestration, songs, many of which were admirable; the opera SALOMÉ, which placed him at the head of the Decadent school of musicians; became one of the best of recent conductors; was a man of wide reading and culture and possessed a degree of skill in advertising surpassing that of the whole Wagner family. Son of Franz Strauss, first horn player in the royal orchestra at Munich, he is said to have composed a polka, and to have played the piano at four. Pupil of his father, and of F. W. Meyer, several of his choral works were sung while he was a student in the Gymnasium, and before he was 17, three of his songs and his string quartet in A had been performed in public. In 1884, a year after he completed his university course, Theodore Thomas performed his symphony in F minor, Op. 12, in New York, and thereafter his works were known in the United States as quickly as in Europe. In 1885 he was made chapelmaster at Meiningen in succession to von Bülow, who had produced his suite for 13 wind instruments there with great success. He soon resigned this post to travel, and in the fall was made assistant conductor at Munich under Levi, and four years later became assistant to Lassen at Weimar. In 1892 he visited Greece and Egypt to recover his health, which had been impaired by overwork, bringing back "Guntram," his first opera, which was produced at Weimar, May 12, 1894, and the following year married Pauline de Ahna, a beautiful young singer who had created "Freihilde," the principal rôle in his opera, and thereafter proved the best interpreter of his songs. His "Feuersnot" was produced with success at Dresden, Nov., 1901. His remarkable skill as a conductor made him a welcome visitor in all music centres. He was appointed court chapelmaster in Munich and in Berlin, and often conducted the first performances of his own works in other cities, notably of his "Sinfonia Domestica," while in New York, 1905-6, and "Salomé" in Paris, 1908, and still earlier the "Aus Italien" symphonic fantasia (in which he incorporated a song by Denza, mistaking it for a folk song) in London. During his American tour, when he was accompanied by Mme. Strauss de Ahna as soloist, he conducted a large orchestra under the best auspices in the principal cities, but signalized his departure by giving concerts in a big New York shop for a handsome fee. In Paris, where the production of "Salome" was said to have been a poor one, he was soon on the best terms with the officials, and on his departure received the cross of the Legion of Honor. Most of his symphonic poems, such as "Also Sprach Zarathustra" (after "Nietzsche"), the grotesque orchestral rondo "Till Eulenspiegel's lustige Streiche" and "Ein Heldenleben," are accompanied by elaborate "programmatic notes." In the exquisite piano accompaniment of "Enoch Arden" the music is skilfully subdued so as not to strain the voice of the reader, while in "Don Quixote" he found it necessary to invent an especial mechanism for the wind effect. Perfectly familiar with classic form, he seemed always striving for new and startling effects, and although capable of writing melody, carried his ideas of realism to such extremes that only the devoted few who proved their superior intelligence by being always able to understand him were able to understand him at all. The full list of his works includes: Festival March for orchestra, Op. 1; String quartet in A, Op. 2; five pieces for solo piano, Op. 3; piano sonata in B minor, Op. 5; sonata for piano and 'cello, Op. 6; Serenade for wind instruments, Op. 7; violin concerto, Op. 8; Stimmungsbilder for piano, Op. 9; eight songs, Op. 10; concerto for French horn, Op. 11; symphony in F minor, Op. 12; quartet for piano and strings, Op. 13; Wanderers' Sturmlied, 6-part choir with orchestra, Op. 14; five songs, Op. 15; symphonic fantasia "Aus Italien," Op. 16; six songs, Op. 17; sonata for violin and piano, E flat, Op. 18; "Lotosblätter" songs, Op. 19; the tone poem for orchestra, Don Juan, Op. 20; "Schlichte Weisen" songs, Op. 21; "Mädchenblumen" songs, Op. 22; tone poem for orchestra "Macbeth," Op. 23; the tone poem for orchestra, "Tod und Verklärung," Op. 24; the three-act opera "Guntram," Op. 25; two songs, Op. 26; four songs, Op. 27;

String. The general name in music for every vibrating cord used in the production of tone, whether a drawn cast steel wire for use in the piano, the spun silk sometimes used for violins and guitars, or the entrails of sheep familiarly known as "catgut." To secure a deep tone without too much bulk it is customary to bind the G string of the violin, two lower strings of viola and 'cello, and three strings of the guitar with a wrapping of silver or other white metal. The highest string of many instruments is called the chanterelle. The Italians are reputed to be the best makers of strings for instruments of the violin and guitar families. The tension of a set of strings for violin has ranged, according to the standard of PITCH, from 63 to 90 pounds. The tension of a modern grand piano is upwards of sixteen tons.

Combinations of the stringed instruments in an orchestra are commonly referred to collectively as "the strings."

Subsidized Theatres are those which are supported in part by grants of money from a government, a system generally prevalent except in English speaking countries. Nearly every nation in Europe possesses a ministry of fine arts, sometimes in combination with the department devoted to education, but more often separate. In either case this branch of the government assumes a general supervision of all the arts, and occupies a position of no less dignity and importance than a British Board of Trade or an American Department of Agriculture. Nor is such a ministry without commercial value, since those countries which place music, the theatre, painting, and sculpture on a purely commercial basis, are compelled to pay tribute in cash to the others, whether republican or monarchical, which profess a paternal interest in such matters. Art is a republic since the collective judgment of a people is final, and one from which no artist can appeal; and republican

France presents the most perfect organization in the world for the encouragement, diffusion, and maintenance of art; yet from the beginning it has been the princes, whether secular or religious, who have been its best patrons, and to Louis XIV and to Napoleon France owes her pre-eminence. To the Bourbon the world is indebted alike for the House of Molière and the Opéra, and to the Corsican for that splendid Conservatoire which has preserved the classic traditions, trained the interpretative artists, and helped the men who have lent their creative genius to both institutions. But the subsidized theatre is not dependent upon central government alone. There is hardly a city in Europe of more than 25,000 inhabitants which does not possess its municipal theatre, which does not have its season of lyric drama, and its municipal concerts, all at a price within the means of the general public, and all serving as training schools for singers, instrumentalists, conductors, and composers. Thus La Scala, the home of lyric drama in Milan, is owned and largely governed by the municipality, and has an assured income of $60,000 per annum in subsidies. The Opéra and Opéra Comique, and since 1908 the Gaité Theatre in Paris, are under government control. In the Gaité, the experiment was made of giving the theatre rent free to the Isola Frères, and compelling the Opéra and Opéra Comique to lend scenery artists and chorus when needed, on condition that performances be given at popular prices. The highest seats were sold at 80 cents, the cheapest at 10 cents, and there were 500 10-cent seats at each performance. The repertoire included "ROBERT LE DIABLE," "FAVORITA," "MIGNON," "TRAVIATA," "TROVATORE," "CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA," etc. Besides a government subsidy, divided between the OPERA and OPÉRA COMIQUE, of which the Opéra alone received $160,000 yearly, the Broussan and Messenger management of the Opéra had a guarantee fund of about $250,000 raised by subscription. A complete performance of the "Ring of the Nibelungs," and a supplementary season devoted to Russian operas thus became possible during the first season of the new management. The court opera in Vienna has always been practically supported by the reigning family, while the minor theatres have also participated in a distribution of government funds. In Berlin, where the Kaiser is manifesting a greater interest in music than any of the Hohenzollerns since the reign of FREDERICK THE GREAT, the opera houses, the principal institutions of learning for music and the other fine arts, have been always supported mainly by the government, and plans were being perfected in 1908 for erection of a People's Opera House at a cost of $4,000,000, half to be paid by the municipality of Berlin, and half by parliament, the municipality to then become a partner in the ownership of the present opera house. The best seats in the new theatre will be 87½ cents, and the cheapest, 12½ cents. It was in Berlin that Geraldine Farrar found the opportunity to develop as an opera singer which was denied her in America, and it was in Berlin that half a dozen young artists developed, during the existence of the Henry W. Savage English opera company, and took refuge, when it disbanded; while his prima donna, Gertrude Rennyson, joined the forces of the Vienna opera, where Edith Walker had her first chance. Mary Garden was one of the many English speaking artists formed at the Paris Opéra Comique. The Leipsic Theatre, as well as the Conservatory, are under royal patronage; the Dresden Opera, like that of Munich, is chiefly supported by the court, while from Barcelona to Hamburg, and from Bordeaux to Moscow, the subsidized or municipal theatre is a flourishing institution. Turning to London and New York, with three notable exceptions, the Carl Rosa company in London, the Savage company, now disbanded, and the Manhattan Opera House, opera has been possible only by a system of subsidies, the difference being, that, instead of an allowance or guarantee by government, an Opera Syndicate, composed of wealthy Englishmen, provides the funds with which to meet deficits at Covent Garden, London; while the Metropolitan Realty Company in New York not only owns the opera house, but guarantees the company of which the impresarii are the heads. The New Theatre, which was being erected in New York, 1908, and at which it was proposed to give opéra comique, was based on the same system. But the system of private guarantors cannot be said, in view of the experience of the whole world, to be a success. The history of opera in the larger music centres of Europe is practically continuous. In London, it is a record of fabulous prices to singers of foreign training, of repeated financial failures, and of music drama in every language except the only one spoken by the masses of the population. Needless to say, the native composers have been obliged to devote their attention to works for which they might hope to obtain a hearing. Ethel Smyth composed to German libretti; Balfe drew on Paris for the support he could not secure at home; the works of Wallace have been permanently shelved; and the only English operas known to-day are the comic operas of Sullivan, and the so-called musical comedies, which, as a class, take their place in art half-way between the ballad opera and the coon song. Under the Opera Syndicate, Covent Garden has been able to hold its own and that is all. In New York every impresario, until the administrations of Maurice Grau and H. von Conried, became bankrupt, or gave up in despair. Under Conried the receipts at the Metropolitan mounted to $1,200,000 per annum, and he is said to have cleared $27,000 on his first performance of "Parsifal," but in 1908 there were no prospects of opera in the vernacular beyond the promise held out by Gatti-Casazza to produce "The Pipe of Desire," by Frederick S. Converse. The first American opera, now extant, was composed by Francis Hopkinson, Philadelphia, 1767, to book by Andrew Barton. It bore the ominous title

"The Disappointment," foreshadowing the fate of American composers for the next century and a half. William H. Fry, critic of the New York Tribune, composed "Leonora" and "Notre Dame de Paris," 1863. Walter Damrosch produced his own "Scarlet Letter," while at the head of his own company; but while serious operas have been composed by two-score Americans, not one has obtained an adequate production with the exception of the "Scarlet Letter." Polyglot grand opera, polyglot to the extent of several languages being heard in a single performance, has been the rule; and only Sousa, Herbert, and De Koven have produced acceptable comic operas. It would seem, therefore, that while the subsidy or paternal system has resulted in the production of all of the world's masterpieces of serious opera, the commercial system, with its expensive stars, inattention to ensemble, and frequent bankruptcies, despite the promises of private guarantors, has blighted the genius or the ambition of English speaking composers.

Sullivan (Dr. Sir Arthur Seymour) composed much excellent music in all forms, most of which has been overshadowed by the extraordinary success of "H. M. S. Pinafore," "The Mikado," etc., comic operas to books by W. S. Gilbert. Son of an Irish bandmaster and clarinetist, like many other eminent British musicians, Sullivan received his early training as a chorister in the Eng. Chapel Royal, where Rev. Thomas Helmore was Master of the Children when he entered, 1854. He was the first to win the Mendelssohn Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, 1856, but continued at the Chapel Royal until his voice broke; and the following year, or in 1858, entered the Leipsic Conservatory, where he remained until 1861, studying with Moscheles, Hauptmann, Plaiddy, Rietz, and Richter. His first composition, "O Israel," a sacred song, was published at 13 (Novello), and his "Lalla Rookh" overture was composed at 18, but the music to "The Tempest," which he produced in London on his return from Leipsic, was his first notable success. In 1864, his cantata "Kenilworth" was sung at the Birmingham Festival, and in the same year his ballet music "L'Ile enchantée," was performed at Covent Garden. His first opera, "The Sapphire Necklace" to a poor libretto by Chorley was not performed; but his symphony in E, an "In Memoriam" overture on the death of his father, the overture "Marmion," and the oratorio "The Prodigal Son" were all produced before the close of 1869, the last-named work at the Worcester Festival. "Cox and Box," to book adapted by Burnand was produced in 1867, and followed by "The Contrabandista"; but his first real success as a dramatic composer began with his association with Gilbert, with whom he produced "Thespis," 1871, "Trial by Jury," 1875, and in 1887, "The Sorcerer," which ran at the London Opera Comique 175 nights. "Pinafore," produced May 25, 1878, was performed 700 times at the same house, was pirated in London, and played by several companies simultaneously in the United States. This extraordinary success resulted in the composition of "Pirates of Penzance," 1880; "Patience," 1881; "Iolanthe," 1882; "The Mikado," 1885; "Ruddigore," 1887; "Yeomen of the Guard," 1888, and "The Gondoliers," 1889; those of later date than 1881 being produced at the Savoy, built expressly for the Gilbert and Sullivan productions, and managed by D'Oyly Carte. The libretti for these works are unequalled in English, and unsurpassed in any language. Then came the disagreement between composer and librettist, and Sullivan's next work, "Haddon Hall," was to book by Grundy. The following year the differences had been forgotten, and "Utopia Limited" was composed to Gilbert's book. "The Grand Duke" was produced, 1896, but again the composer and librettist parted. Sullivan's "The Beauty Stone," was composed to book by Carr and Pinero, and "The Rose of Persia," to book by

Hood. His next work, "The Emerald Isle," was left unfinished at his death and completed by EDWARD GERMAN. "Ivanhoe," his only attempt at grand opera, although given a most careful production in 1891, proved a complete failure. Of his many songs "The Lost Chord" has proved most popular. His oratorios included "The Light of the World" to biblical text of his own compilation, Leeds, 1873; "The Martyr of Antioch," Leeds, 1880; and "The Golden Legend" to book by Bennett adapted from Longfellow, Leeds, the best of them all. Besides many hymns, of which "Onward, Christian Soldiers" is the best known, he composed 13 anthems, six sacred part-songs. Other works to be noted: incidental music to "The Merchant of Venice," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "Henry VIII," "Macbeth," "The Foresters," the ballet "Victoria and Merrie England," a "Festival Te Deum," "Overture di Ballo," and the cantata "On Shore and Sea." Sullivan was knighted in 1883, was chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and of the Order of Saxe Coburg and Gotha; Mus. Dr. of both Oxford and Cambridge, and organist to the Mason Grand Lodge; Principal of the National Training School, 1876-81, and a useful member of many institutions. B. May 13, 1842, London; d. Shortly afterwards the father died, his mother settled in Vienna, and there Suppé joined her. He had received lessons from Cigali and Ferrari in Padua, and these, supplemented by instruction from Seyfried, in Vienna, enabled him to conduct at the Josephstadt Theatre. He obtained no salary, but soon secured engagements that did pay, and in 1865 settled at the Leopoldstadt Theatre, where he practiced at patching up pasticcios and conducting. The so-called symphonic poems of Liszt are noble works, but descriptive and irregular rather than thematic in development, and the later composers of symphonic poems have departed still further from the traditions of the symphony, so that the term has become meaningless.

Symphonion. Combination of the pianoforte and harmonium, invented by Kauffman of Dresden.

Sometimes the minuet or scherzo precedes the slow movement. The general form of the symphony was fixed by Haydn, and, like the

Time value was shown by stems with tails not unlike those used in modern notation. In German or Organ Tablature, used for all keyboard instruments, the melody was written on the staff, and vertical rows of letters underneath showed the accompaniment. Tablature still exists for Zither music, was well adapted to the instruments for which it was originally devised, but by reason of its very adaptability to so many instruments, could never be of practical use as applied to all instruments when brought together in concerted music. The bar, the tails of notes, and the vertical character of the modern score are all derived from Tablature.

Tannhäuser. Richard Wagner's three-act romantic opera to his own book was first performed Oct. 20, 1845, at the Dresden Royal Opera House. Tannhäuser, a minstrel knight attached to the court of the Landgrave of Thuringia, has fallen victim to the wiles of Holda, or Venus, and the first act opens in the caverns of the Venusberg, which this goddess inhabits. Tannhäuser sleeps, watched over by Venus, who evokes voluptuous visions to please her lover, but Tannhäuser, on awakening, remembers the sunlight, the blue sky, and the forests of the upper world, and begs permission to see them once more. Neither threats nor entreaties move him. He will always champion and sing the praise of Venus, but not in her, goddess of joy, rests his salvation, "but in the Virgin Mary." At the utterance of the sacred name, Venus and her attendants vanish, and instead of the caverns of the Venusberg, Tannhäuser finds himself alone in a peaceful valley under the shadows of the Wartburg. A shepherd sings of Venus and the joys of spring, interrupting his song with rustic airs played upon the pipe, until there rises in the distance the chant of a party of pilgrims on their way to Rome. The procession draws near, crosses the path of the minstrel knight, and as it recedes into the distance, he sinks to his knees in prayer. Then hunting horns are heard, and in a moment, Tannhäuser is surrounded by his former friends and associates, Wolfram von Eschenbach, Walther von der Vogelweide, Biterolf, and in the presence of his lord, the Landgrave. They greet him cordially, and invite him to return to the Wartburg, but Tannhäuser, feeling his unworthiness, refuses until Wolfram hints that Elizabeth will be glad to see him again. Then he accepts in a sudden burst of enthusiasm, and the act concludes with a splendid septet. The second act takes place in the Hall of Song of Wartburg. After a love scene between Tannhäuser and Elizabeth, the guests assemble, for the Landgrave has called the Minnesingers together for a contest of song. Wolfram opens the contest, but when Tannhäuser's turn comes, he sings not the pure emotion which the Minnesingers have idealized, but the sensual joys he has tasted in Venusberg. The women hurriedly leave the Hall. At Tannhäuser's confession that he has been favoured of Holda, the men would kill him, but he is rescued by Elizabeth, who begs that he may have time to repent of his sins. Moved by her sorrow, Tannhäuser already repents his rashness, and agrees to make the pilgrimage to Rome, there to beg forgiveness of the Pope. For the third act the setting is that of the valley below the Wartburg. Elizabeth kneels before a shrine, praying for Tannhäuser's return. The song of the pilgrims is heard, and as they pass before the shrine with uncovered heads, Elizabeth vainly seeks her lover among them. Wolfram, who has been watching over her safety from a distance, offers to escort Elizabeth back to the castle, but she declines with a gesture which signifies the depths of her sorrow, and Wolfram, left alone, sings his hopeless love of Elizabeth to the Evening Star. The twilight deepens. Wolfram is about to depart, when Tannhäuser, worn with sorrow and fatigue, comes slowly up the path the pilgrims had traversed. Replying to Wolfram's questions, Tannhäuser tells the story of his pilgrimage, and how the Pope declared there was no more hope for Tannhäuser's forgiveness than there was that his staff should put forth new buds. In his despair Tannhäuser is seeking the entrance to Venusberg. As he speaks the rocks open, disclosing a vision of Venus and her nymphs. Tannhäuser, hearing the goddess pronounce his welcome, is about to fly to her, when Wolfram utters the name Elizabeth. The vision disappears, and a chorus of monks is heard chanting a dirge, and as the dawn breaks, a procession files slowly down from the Wartburg, bearing the body of Elizabeth on an open bier. Tannhäuser falls dead after uttering the words "Saint Elizabeth, pray for me," and a moment later, a fresh band of pilgrims enter, bringing from Rome the Pope's staff, which has blossomed in token of Tannhäuser's redemption through love. The original cast consisted of: Tannhäuser, Tichatschek, ten.; Wolfram, Mitterwurzer, bar.; Walther, Schloss, ten.; Beterolf, Wachter, bar.; Heinrich der Schreiber, ten.; Reinmar von Zweter, bass; the Landgrave, bass; Elizabeth, Frä. Wagner, sop.; Venus, Mme. Schröder-Devrient, sop.; the Shepherd, sop. The opera is introduced by an overture which is one of the greatest and most popular works in this form in existence. The principal musical numbers are: the Venusberg music with a bacchanale known as the "Parisian" from the fact that it was composed in Paris after the completion of the opera; the dialogue beginning with Tannhäuser's "Doch sterblich, ach," Tannhäuser and Venus; "Frau Holda kam aus dem Berg hervor," the Shepherd; "Zu dir wall' ich, mein Herr und Gott" (Pilgrim's Chorus), "Ach! schwer drückt mich der Sunden Last,"

Temperament, Equal, divides the octave into twelve semitones, none of which is perfect, but all of which are accurate enough to satisfy the ear. Although on modern keyboard instruments a sharp and b flat, for example, are one and the same tone, produced by striking the same black key, there is a mathematical discrepancy between them, and to produce a keyboard instrument with JUST INTONATION would require a keyboard of 53 keys to the octave instead of the 12 now employed. Such keyboards were actually made, and are illustrated in Kircher's "MUSURGIA," but were so inconvenient that they were abandoned, being replaced by tuning in Unequal Temperament in which the scale of C was made perfectly true to the imperfection of the rest. Twelve perfect fifths and seven octaves tuned up from a fixed tone give a discrepancy or COMMA, which is represented by 80:81.0915, and in Equal Temperament this comma is apportioned throughout the fifths. This compromise carried throughout the scale made all the keys equally available, as Bach proved in his "Woltemperirtes Clavier," the result being the greatest convenience, although the only perfect intervals remaining are the octaves. One of the difficulties of adapting orchestral instruments to Equal Temperament lies in the fact that the brasses produce their notes mostly as harmonics of the fundamental tone of the instrument, and that it is the natural instinct of every player of the string section to produce tones in just intonation. It is therefore practically impossible to reduce all the instruments of the orchestra to this system, and to eliminate the beats which are the natural consequence of dissonant tones. Besides the viols, the trombones are capable of, and usually play, in just intonation, and singers whose sense of pitch is at all acute are sure to follow the same rule. Of course the pure chords which are produced in the string quartet and in a capella singing are impossible in a system of tuning by which perfect consonances are wholly abolished in music for keyed instruments. A comparison of the chords produced by a string quartet and by a piano will reveal more strikingly than any mathematical table the difference between Equal and Just Temperament, but since every system of intervals is a matter of convention, there will doubtless come a time when the sense of hearing will have become so accustomed to the compromise scale that the theoretically perfect consonances of Just Intonation will seem dissonances.

Thaïs. Jules Massenet's "lyric comedy," to book by Louis Gallet, based on Anatole France's novel, was first performed, 1894, at the Paris Opéra Comique. Athanael has renounced the luxuries of Alexandria to become a cenobite or monk of the desert. Twelve of the brethren, presided over by Palemon, are taking their evening meal by the banks of the Nile, but Athanael's seat is vacant. As Palemon tells that he has seen their brother in a vision, and that he is returning, Athanael enters, worn with fatigue. He has been in Alexandria and has found the city given over to sin. "A woman, Thaïs, fills it with scandal—and through her, hell there governs men." The cenobites ask: "Who is this Thaïs," and Athanael replies: "An infamous priestess of Venus," whom he had known, and by whom he had been tempted before his conversion. Palemon sagely warns him not to meddle in such matters; the night comes, and with it a vision in which Athanael sees Thaïs in the theatre of Alexandria, half clad, but with her face veiled, enacting the loves of Aphrodite. From a distance, the cheers of the mob can be heard, which increase with the animation of Thaïs. As day breaks, the vision disappears, Athanael awakes, and although dissuaded by Palemon, resolves to seek out and convert Thaïs. The scene shifts to the palace of Nicias in Alexandria, where Athanael is welcomed as an old friend. Nicias causes Athanael to be robbed and perfumed by his women slaves, but laughs at the notion that Thaïs can be withdrawn from the worship of Venus. Thaïs enters, attended by a crowd of players, comedians and philosophers. Interested by the fierce mien of the cenobite, Thaïs inquires who he may be, and when she is told that it is Athanael's hope to convert her, dares him to try, and disposes herself to reproduce the scene of the loves of Aphrodite. As slaves are detaching her robe, Athanael rushes out with a gesture of horror. In the second act, Thaïs is praying before the shrine of Venus. She is weary, unhappy, but as she prays for eternal beauty Athanael enters, and despite the seductive loveliness of the priestess, preaches the life everlasting. Though Thaïs refuses to believe, she declines to receive the visit of Nicias, latest of her lovers, and Athanael then tells her he will await her coming until dawn on her doorstep. After a religious meditation played by the orchestra, the scene shifts. Athanael is shown asleep on the last step of the portico of Thaïs' house. Thaïs enters from the house, arouses Athanael and says: "I prayed — I wept — having seen the nothingness of pleasure — to thee I come as thou hast ordered." Athanael is prepared to take her to the convent presided over by Albine, "at once a daughter of the Cæsars, and the servant, the purest of Christ." Thaïs begs that she may take with her a statuette of Eros, but Athanael hurls it against the pavement, and Thaïs meekly prepares to follow him, when Nicias and his friends block the way. He has won at the gaming table thirty times the price he paid for the beauty of Thaïs, and prepares to celebrate his success with an orgy. Thaïs, obedient to the will of Athanael, has set fire to her house that all pertaining to the old Thaïs might be destroyed, and she comes forth, meanly clad, to accompany Athanael to the desert, when they are stopped by the mob. Vainly does Athanael declare that she has now become the spouse of God, the mob attacks the cenobite, and he is wounded in the forehead by a stone. Athanael will welcome martyrdom, but just then the flames have been discovered enveloping Thaïs' house. Nicias flings gold to the people to distract their attention, and while they scramble for the coin, Athanael and Thaïs escape. Act four takes place in an oasis of the desert, the abode of Albine and her nuns in the distance. Worn with fatigue, Thaïs faints, but Athanael, who realizes that he has been too severe, kisses her bleeding feet, brings her fruit and water. Soon women's voices are heard chanting the Pater Noster. Albine and her nuns enter, and Thaïs bids farewell to Athanael forever, adding "in the celestial city we shall find one another again." The scene shifts to the abode of the cenobites in the Thebaid. Twenty days have elapsed since the return of Athanael, says Palemon, in which he has taken no nourishment. "The triumph he has won over hell has broken him, body and soul." Athanael confesses to Palemon that the beauty of Thaïs haunts him. He sees her as Helen, as Phryne, as Venus Astarte, all their splendor and voluptuousness in a single creature. Palemon sadly reminds him of the warning he had given and departs. Thaïs appears in a luminous vision, tempting him, as at their first meeting, then vanishes, and a new apparition shows her dying at Albine's convent. Voices chant "A saint is about to quit the earth — Thaïs of Alexandria is about to die." Athanael rushes into the night, crying: "Fool that I was, not to have understood — that alone was all, that one of her caresses was worth more than heaven!" The next scene reveals the garden of Albine's convent. Thaïs is dying. The nuns welcome Athanael, who has come, Albine supposes, "to bless this saint whom thou gavest us." Athanael vainly pleads his love, for the joys of heaven unfold themselves to the dying saint, and she narrates "the sound of the harps of gold enchants me, soft perfumes penetrate my being, I sense — an exquisite beatitude — all my sorrows sleep — Ah! Heaven! I see God." And then she dies. Athanael, with a terrible cry, casts himself on his knees before her.

Natural son of Prince Dietrichstein

and Baroness Wetzlar, Thalberg was the favourite of both parents, was educated by his father for the diplomatic service, but from 14 devoted himself almost wholly to music. Pupil of Mittag, Sechter, and possibly of Hummel and Czerny, he made his first tour of Germany as virtuoso in 1834, was made court pianist at Vienna, achieved a notable success in Paris, 1835, and thereafter was an established favourite. In 1855 he toured Brazil, and the following year the United States, then settling in a villa at Posillippo, near Naples. His last public appearance took place in London, 1863, and toward the close of his life not a piano was to be found on his estate. Thomas (Theodore) was the foremost of early American chamber musicians, orchestral conductors, and teachers, the pioneer of the large orchestra and the most accomplished interpretative musician of his generation in America. Son of a violinist, who emigrated from Hanover to the United States when the lad was ten years old, he soon learned the mastery of the violin from his father, and appeared at many concerts in New York as soloist before he was 15. At 16 he made a successful tour of the Southern States, and on returning to New York was the first violinist at concerts given by Jenny Lind, Mario, etc., acting as concertmeister for Arditì, and for various wandering opera companies for the next ten years. In 1855 he began (with DR. WM. MASON) a series of chamber concerts in New York which continued until 1869. In 1864 he gave his first series of symphony concerts in New York, which were continued for five years, and again resumed from 1872 to 1878, and to keep his men together, organized summer concerts in various gardens. His orchestral tours began in 1869, and their educational value was of the highest, for he produced the classics and the newer works with an art in programme building which has rarely been equalled. In 1879 a disastrous season at the Philadelphia Centennial was followed by the disbanding of his orchestra; but he had conducted several of the Cincinnati May Festivals, and on the foundation of the College of Music in that city, 1878, he accepted its direction, returning to New York to conduct the Philharmonic Societies of New York and Brooklyn, and organizing a large chorus in the former city. In 1880 he retired from the Cincinnati College of Music, although retaining the direction of the May Festivals during life, and again settled in New York, where he collected an excellent orchestra, and in 1883 toured with an organization of symphonic proportions from New York to San Francisco and return. Musical affairs in New York were not patronized at any time in Mr. Thomas's career with the liberality which has been conspicuous for the past decade, and in 1888, on the expiration of his term as conductor of the Philharmonic Society, a liberal offer was made him if he would organize a Symphony orchestra in Chicago. There his labours were appreciated at their full worth, and crowned ultimately with a success undeniable, for he lived to conduct the first concerts in the Symphony Hall, which had been built by popular subscription as a home for his organization. Mr. Thomas was a man of brusque manner, quick temper, but a kindly heart, knowing his players well, and befriending them often. Their loyalty was genuine because of knowledge of his solid worth. But he was often unnecessarily harsh to singers, who were less able to make allowance for his defects, and he was never at his best either in conducting a chorus, or in accompanying a soloist. He was an admirable interpreter of Beethoven, in whose symphonies he took an especial delight, but sufficiently catholic in taste to appreciate and make known the works of Wagner and Strauss. B. Oct. 11, 1835, Essens, East Friesland; d. Jan. 4, 1905, Chicago, Ill. See "Theodore Thomas," a sympathetic and interesting life by his friend George P. UPTON.

Thomasschule, of LEIPSIK, was among the most celebrated as well as the most venerable institutions in Germany for the cultivation of music, and had for its Cantor or director in 1908 Prof. Gustav SCHRECK. The school was an outgrowth of the Thomas Choir, the singing organization of the Augustinian monastery of Leipsic, whose foundation dated back to the middle ages. The monks were dispersed by the Lutherans, and their convent occupied by a gymnasium or school, and it was the duty of the scholars to provide music for the services at the churches of St. Thomas and St. Nicholas. The singers average from 12 to 22 years of age, and the "alumni," to win their appointments, must pass a severe examination in music, possess a very good soprano voice, and be able to sing at sight. Once accepted, the alumni receive both living and education at the expense of the city until their final examinations, which admit them to Leipsic University. The older students teach the younger ones singing and piano playing, and all are under the supervision of three inspectors who are likewise teachers in the Thomas Gymnasium, and the rector of the school is president of the alumni, who numbered about 60 in 1908, as in the time of J. S. BACH. The Thomas Choir sings motets every Sunday afternoon at half past one in the Thomas Church, naturally giving especial prominence to the works of Bach. Every Sunday concerts are given alternately at the Thomas and Nicholas churches, with the aid of the Leipsic City orchestra. For many years the alumni or actual singers were the main support of the school, but they were in the minority of the scholars in 1908. The cantors of the Thomasschule have been, besides the illustrious Bach, Rhau, who was contemporary with Luther, Calvisius, Schein, and later Kuhnau. The libretto is based on "Terra Baixa," a Catalonian play by Angel Guimera, of which there is a Spanish version by José Echegaray known as "Tierra Baja," and an English version known as "Marta of the Lowlands." The prologue shows a pasture land in the Pyrenees where the shepherd Pedro is tending his flocks. Sebastiano, a rich countryman, informs Pedro that he had brought him a bride, Marta, a young girl from the lowlands. Infatuated with the girl at first sight, Pedro is only too willing to make her his wife, and departs for the lowland village where the wedding is to take place. In this village the first act takes place. Not until after the ceremony does he learn the meaning of the jeers with which the villagers received him. Marta, a strolling player, had been forced into relations with Sebastiano by her father, to whom Pedro had given a mill which provided the old rascal with an easy living. Marta tells him the whole story, and he is wild with rage. At first he wishes to kill Marta, but his love for her is too genuine, and he determines to avenge her. The second act opens in the home of Marta and Pedro. Sebastiano enters, coolly ejects the husband, and proceeds to make love to the wife, who resists his advances. Pedro suddenly returns, a knife in his hand, crying: "Man to man!" "I have no weapon," Sebastiano exclaims, seeking to escape. "Then I need none, for I will strangle you," answers Pedro, and throwing away his weapon, which Sebastiano vainly tries to capture, he closes in on his enemy, and chokes him to death. Then opening the door, he calls in the villagers, tells them what he has done, clasps Marta in his arms, and cries: "We will go back to the mountains; far from the lowlands!"

The CHEVÉ, GALIN-CHEVÉ, GLOVER, and CURWEN systems all have the disadvantage of substituting a form of notation differing from that in universal use, but these various methods have been spread into many parts of the world through the medium of the public schools. As the teaching of music to children in public schools is of minor importance at best, and can only be regarded as ornamental and incidental to the Three R's it would seem that the introduction of two systems can lead only to confusion, and that until an ecumenical council of musicians shall have repudiated the staff system of NOTATION, it would be well to familiarize the children with the written characters in which the works of the masters are recorded.

It consisted of an independent false keyboard, called a Transpositeur, to be placed over the keyboard of a piano, after which it could be shifted through every semitone in the octave.

Donatelli, sop.; Flora Bervoix, sop.; Georgio Germont, Vavesi, bar.; Alfredo Germont, ten.; Gastone de Letorieres, ten.; Dottore Grenvil, bass; Marquis d'Obigny, bass. The first act opens in the home of Violetta, a consumptive member of the demi-monde who is entertaining some friends at supper, including Alfredo and Gastone. Alfredo proclaims his passion with such evident sincerity as to arouse a similar feeling in Violetta. In the second act Violetta and Alfredo have sought the seclusion of the country, but Alfredo's dream of bliss is somewhat marred by the indiscretion of Violetta's maid, who informs him that she has been pawning her mistress's gems to keep up the household expenses. He leaves suddenly for Paris in search of funds. Violetta receives a note from Flora, inviting her to return to Paris, where all of her friends pine at her absence. Then Alfredo's father enters to beg that Violetta will give up his son, as the scandal is interfering with the marriage of Alfredo's sister. Though wrung with anguish, Violetta agrees, writes a letter of farewell, and a moment later has a pathetic interview with Alfredo, who has just returned, then rushes away from the house. Alfredo reads her letter and determines to revenge himself, but the father appears and reminds him of his duties at home. The scene shifts to Flora's house in Paris, where a masquerade is being held. Alfredo denounces Violetta as a mercenary wretch, and to cap the climax of insults, throws his purse at her. Violetta faints with mortification and grief as Alfredo's father again makes an opportune appearance and leads his son away. The third act reveals Violetta on her death-bed reading a letter, in which Alfredo's father, touched by the evident sincerity of her love for his son, tells her that he has written him to return.

A moment later Alfredo enters, and there is a rapturous reunion which is soon terminated by death, at which the Doctor and Alfredo's father are present. The opera has had almost unrivalled popularity, although the lyric stage hardly affords a more ludicrous spectacle than the death scene of the consumptive demi-mondaine, who, from Donatelli to Sembrich, has been impersonated by decidedly plump prima donnas. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: drinking song, "Libiamo, Libiamo," first sung by Alfredo, then by Violetta, and then by chorus; "Ah! fors è lui," Violetta. Act II: "De' miei bollenti," Alfredo; "Pura siccome un angelo," Violetta; "Di Provenza il mar," Germont. Tristan und Isolde. Richard Wagner's three-act opera to his own book was first performed June 10, 1865, at Munich, under the direction of Hans von Bülow. The first act takes place on board the ship in which Tristan, nephew of King Marke of Cornwall, is returning home with Isolde, daughter of the King of Ireland, who is to be King Marke's bride. Tristan and Isolde have met before. Tristan had slain in battle Morold, to whom Isolde was then betrothed, and had received a wound of which Isolde had cured him. Isolde has fallen in love with Tristan, and this emotion is complicated by her anger against the man who is coolly taking her to be the bride of another, instead of wooing for himself. In a colloquy with her maid, Brangäne, Isolde declaims against Tristan, then sends for the Cornish knight to come to her. He refuses, not only from a sense of duty to King Marke, but because he loves Isolde and is afraid to trust himself in her presence. Isolde determines Tristan shall die. She commands Brangäne to prepare a drink mingled with a poison which, with other magic compounds, she has inherited from her mother. Again she summons Tristan, this time so imperatively he dare not refuse. Telling him it is time to make atonement for Morold's death, she hands him the cup, and when he has drunk, snatches it from him and drains the rest herself. But Brangäne has substituted a love potion for the more deadly drug. Its effect is instantaneous, and it is with difficulty that Brangäne separates them from a passionate embrace as the vessel lands and King Marke approaches. The second act takes place in Cornwall, where Isolde is now Queen. Victims of an irresistible passion, neither she nor Tristan thinks of concealment, and despite the warning given by Brangäne, who tells her Melot has been spying on them, she takes advantage of King Marke's pretended absence on a hunting expedition, the torch is extinguished as a signal to Tristan, and a moment later the lovers are together in the garden, where a long and deliriously erotic dialogue takes place. Kurwenal, Tristan's servant, rushes in to repeat the warning which Brangäne has already sounded for their unheeding ears, but is too late. King Marke and his attendants surprise the lovers. Tristan and Melot fight, and Tristan is mortally wounded. The third act transpires in Tristan's castle on the coast of Brittany, whither the wounded knight has been removed by Kurwenal. He has sent a vessel to bring Isolde to heal his master's hurts, but when the shepherd's pipe signals that this vessel is approaching, Tristan, in his joy, tears off his bandages. Thus weakened, he has only strength to call Isolde by name as she enters, then dies in her arms. A second vessel approaches, bearing King Marke, to whom Brangäne has confessed having administered the love potion. Understanding the helplessness of the lovers, King Marke has forgiven, and now comes to unite them. But Kurwenal, who cannot conceive so friendly a purpose, seeks to defend the castle from attack, and is soon dying at his master's side. When King Marke enters, Isolde is singing the Liebestod, and a moment later falls dead over Tristan's body. King Marke invokes a blessing on the dead, while the orchestra tells that in death the lovers are united. The original cast consisted of Tristan, L. Schnorr von Carolsfeld, ten.; Kurwenal, Mitterwurzer, bar.; King Marke, Zoltmayer, bass; Melot, ten.; Steersman, bar.; Young Sailor, ten.; Shepherd, sop.; Isolde, Frau Schnorr von Carolsfeld, sop.; Brangäne, Frl.

a double middle section in which the two outer parts can slide upon each other, thus enabling the player to shorten or lengthen the enclosed vibrating column of air at will, producing all tones and semitones within its compass. Capable of such gradations of tone as can be otherwise obtained only from viol instruments or the human voice, the trombone is among the oldest of musical instruments in the world. Its invention has been attributed to Osiris, then to Tyrtæus, 7th century B. C., and it was believed until recently that an exceedingly fine specimen had been revealed in the excavations of Pompei, in the 18th century. By the Germans it was known as the Posaune, and Hans Menschel is said to have produced instruments equal to those of the present day in 1520. In England it was first known as the Sackbut, but the French and Italian name has come in to general use. Trombones have been made in every size and therefore in every key. The Alto, Tenor, and Bass are preferred however, the Trumpet forming their treble. The trombone has seven positions, defined by elongations of the tube, each with its series of open tube harmonics, and in the hands of a good performer produces very beautiful and absolutely true tones.

Peasants on the eve of revolt against their master, Baron von Schoenau, insult Margaretha, the Baron's daughter, but she is saved by Werner, and gives him a rose. Her cousin, Countess Wildenstein, is struck by Werner's resemblance to her son, who had been stolen by the gypsies many years before. The Countess has been divorced from her husband, who, losing his second wife, desires to effect a reconciliation with her, and proposes Damian, his son by this second marriage, as the husband of Margaretha. Werner is made trumpeter to the Baron, but the Countess discovers him making love to Margaretha, and he is sent back to his troop. Then the castle is attacked by the peasantry, Damian, who has proved a poor lover, shows himself a coward, and the family are rescued by Werner, at the head of his comrades. A birthmark on his arm enables the Countess to identify him as her long lost son, and of course he becomes the bridegroom of Margaretha. The work has become widely known in an English version.

The gentle arts fell into decay, however, and the Troubadours who had numbered princes and kings among their number, fell into disrepute, and finally ceased to exist.

Trovatore. Giuseppe Verdi's four-act opera, to book by Cammarano, based on a tragedy by Vega, was first performed Jan. 19, 1853, Rome. The Paris cast, 1857, included: Il Conte di Luna, bar., Manrico; Mario, ten.; Ferrando, bass; An Old Zingaro, bass; Un Messo, ten.; Leonora, Mme. Frezzolini; sop.; Azucena, Mme. Borghimamo, mez. sop.; Ines, sop. The first act opens with a midnight scene in di Luna's palace, at which Ferrando tells how the Count's younger brother had been bewitched by a gypsy, and how the gypsy had been burned at the stake, after which the gypsy's daughter and the Count's little brother had both disappeared. Then the scene shifts to the garden in which Leonora is confiding to her friend Ines her love for a handsome Troubadour. Di Luna, who loves Leonora, sings a serenade, and Leonora mistakes him for the Troubadour and embraces him. A moment later the Troubadour appears, Leonora explains, and the Count having challenged him to mortal combat, the men withdraw, and Leonora falls fainting with terror. The second act transpires in a ruined castle in which a party of gypsies are gathered about a fire, and where Azucena relates to Manrico the Troubadour, who has been wounded in the duel, practically the same tale which Ferrando had already narrated of the loss of the Count's little brother. The gypsy burned at the stake was Azucena's mother, and she confesses that she had herself seized the young count, and had meant to throw him into the flames, but had destroyed her own child instead. Manrico exclaims, "Then I am not your son!" but the gypsy says she has been raving, denies the statement she had just made, and denounces Count di Luna, warning Manrico not to spare his life a second time. Then a messenger enters, informing Manrico that Leonora has entered a convent, and summoning him to battle against di Luna. The scene shifts to the convent. Di Luna desperately in love, has planned to abduct Leonora. As he is about to drag her away Manrico appears at the head of his followers and takes her to the castle of Castellar. The third act opens with the siege of this castle by Count di Luna. Azucena is arrested as a spy, and Ferrando recognizes her and charges her with having stolen the Count's little brother. Di Luna overjoyed on hearing Azucena call on her son Manrico to save her, determines to punish his rival and the gypsy at the same time. Again the scene shifts, this time to the castle. Leonora and Manrico are about to be married when Ruiz rushes in with the news that Azucena is to be burned, and Manrico hurries to attempt her rescue. The fourth act opens outside the tower, in which Manrico, who has been captured, is confined. Leonora and Ruiz enter as the bells are tolling Manrico's doom. Leonora swears to save him at any cost, and when the Count enters, after vainly begging her lover's life she offers herself in ransom for Manrico, and when the Count agrees to the Troubadour's release, takes poison, and then follows the Count. The next scene reveals the interior of the prison in which Azucena and Manrico are immured. Azucena has a vision of her mother's death, but finally falls asleep, watched over by Manrico. Leonora and the Count enter, but when Leonora offers her lover his freedom he curses her, and only realizes the strength of her love and fidelity when she falls dead at his feet. Then di Luna orders the execution of Manrico, and awakening Azucena drags her to the window, from which she may see the dead body of her supposed son.

But the gypsy exclaims, "He was your brother! Thus thou art avenged, O mother mine!" The curtain falls. The principal numbers are: Act I. "Abbieta Zingara," Ferrando; "Tacea la notte placida," Ines; "Deserto sulla terra," Manrico; "Di geloso amor sprezzato," Manrico, Leonora, and di Luna. Act II. "Vedi le fosche," (Anvil Chorus); "Stride la vampa," Azucena; "Mal reggendo," Manrico; "Il balen del suo," di Luna. Act III. "Giovini poveri," Manrico; "Di quella pirra," Manrico. Act IV. Troyens. Hector Berlioz's "lyric poem" to his own book was originally composed as one long opera, but afterwards arranged for two separate performances, the first part, three acts, being known as "La prise de Troie," and the second, five acts, as "Les Troyens à Carthage." The composer was not able to secure a hearing for the complete work, but the second opera, performed Nov. 4, 1863, at the Paris Théâtre Lyrique, proved a failure. A notable and the first complete performance of the whole work took place 1897 at Carlsruhe.

itself, or rather curved in three lengths for the convenience of the player, and terminating in a bell. The open notes of the trumpet follow the harmonic series, but by means of crooks and slides all chromatic intervals are obtainable. The instrument is of prehistoric origin, and has been made in a great variety of shapes, but while giving a clearer and more resonant tone, has been largely abandoned for the less difficult cornet, except in the largest orchestras. The total length of tube of the orchestral trumpet, including mouthpiece and first crook, is 72 inches, which gives the key of F. Other crooks give E, E flat, D, and C. Crooks giving D flat, B, and B flat are more rarely employed.

Trumpet Marine, or Tromba Marina is a nearly obsolete one-stringed representative of the viol family, formerly much used in convents, and hence called in German "Nonnengeige" (Nun's fiddle). It is played with the bow, only the harmonic tones, which are rich and abundant, owing to the peculiar position of the bridge, and the heavy quality of the string, being used. The name may have been derived from a fancied resemblance to the speaking trumpet used on shipboard.

Tschaikowsky (Peter Ilyitch) composed a famous "Symphony Pathétique," B minor, No. 6, usually accepted as the greatest work in this form of any produced by the New Russian School; "1812, ouverture solennelle" for orchestra, notable for its broad and massive tonal effects, and accompanied in performance by the discharge of cannon; the opera "EUGEN ONÉGIN"; in his works of every class was ultra-Slavonic in his choice of material, seeking vigorous and free expression, strongly defined rhythm, and bizarre effects with a general disregard of classic tradition; was among the most industrious and useful of teachers. At first a law student, then a civil service employee, it was not until he was 22 that Tschaikowsky took up the study of music seriously. Then he entered the St. Petersburg Conservatory, became the pupil of Anton Rubinstein for composition, and Zaremba, harmony and counterpoint, and four years later won the prize for composition with his cantata on Schiller's ode, "An die Freude" (the text of the Beethoven Choral Symphony). For twelve years, from 1866, he was professor of history and theory at the Moscow Conservatory, founded by Nicholas Rubinstein, and while serving in that capacity wrote text-books and made translations of others into Russian. From 1878 he devoted himself exclusively to composition, making his home in St. Petersburg, but visiting Italy, Switzerland, appearing at the London Philharmonic concerts of 1888 and 1889, and conducting his own composition in New York at the opening of Carnegie Hall. In 1893 he was made Dr. Mus. by Cambridge. Guido in writing to Brother Michael, 1025, explains that he has used these syllables to advantage in teaching children, applying them to the Hexachordon naturale in such a way that each syllable represented a given pitch, Ut being movable, in fact, precisely as is Do in the modern Tonic Sol Fa systems. To give the hymn in such a way as to show the origin of Guido's mnemonic idéa, it need only be printed with the first syllable of each line in black type: Ut queant laxis, Resonare fibris, Mira gestorum, Famuli tuorum, Solve pol-luti, Labii reatum, Sancte Ioannes. Variations. The repetition of a theme or musical phrase with such variety as may be obtained by the introduction of new figures in counterpoint, the use of grace notes and other florid treatment, or the transposition of the theme or harmonies to another key. Legitimate use of variations is as effective in bringing out the full beauty of a passage in music as the repetition of an idea clothed in different language which is the basis of Hebrew poetry. Its abuse in either music or poetry is intolerably monotonous. But as thorough knowledge and skill in the construction of variations is essential to the working out of FORM, it is not surprising to find that Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and practically all the great composers of more recent times, have delighted to produce such works.

Of a satirical nature, these songs had for their subjects love, drinking, and passing events, and they became very popular, spreading all over France under the name of Lais des Vaux de Vire. Their eccentric character lived after their history was forgotten, and plays with songs of this description interpolated came to be called Vaudevilles and sometimes Virelais, the songs forming an integral portion of the plot or subject. In the United States the term is loosely applied to what were formerly called "variety shows," entertainments similar to those given in English "Music halls."

Vauxhall Gardens, originally known as Spring Garden, London, contained a theatre at which performances of light operas and ballets were given, as well as concerts, and a rotunda which was used for concerts when the weather was bad. The name was derived from that of Jane Vaux, an early proprietor, and the Gardens first became a popular resort in 1661. Fireworks, tight-rope walking, and other familiar circus attractions, in addition to the concerts, maintained the popularity of the resort until 1859, by which time it had become thoroughly disreputable, and was sold off in building lots. Venice was the seat of a Royal Conservatory of Music which taught the art in all branches, and which is the legitimate successor of the Conservatorii known as the Pietà, the Mendicanti, the Ospedaletto and the Incurabili, all originally charitable organizations, where children, and especially girls, might be trained in music, and from which, at a suitable age, they were dowered by the state, either for marriage or the religious life. Performances of sacred works by the pupils of these great schools were highly admired by contemporary musicians from all parts of the world. From the first half of the 16th century, when WILLAERT became chapelmaster of San Marco Cathedral, and founded what became known as the Venetian school, the influence of Venice in art was of extreme importance. There, too, was the home of MONTEVERDE from whom the modern science of harmony dates its beginnings. There, in 1637, was opened the first Opera House, to which the general public might obtain admission, known as the Teatro di San Cassiano, for which Monteverde composed his new opera "L'Adone," 1640. It is worth while to record that the men who risked their fortunes in this first lyric theatre were the theorbist, Benedetto Ferrari, and the composer, Manelli da Tivoli. So well did their project succeed that by the beginning of 1700, 11 opera houses had been erected in Venice alone. Of the modern opera houses in Venice the most celebrated have been La Fenice and the San Mose.

Veni Creator Spiritus is the hymn provided in the Roman Breviary for the Feast of the Pentecost at Vespers, and is likewise sung at ordinations, and on other solemn occasions. For a time the house was used for the Italian Opera, and then, after many vicissitudes, became a fashionable house for concerts and a new Italian company. Rossini's Stabat Mater, 1842, Verdi's "Aïda," and Requiem, 1876, were among the notable works which had their first Parisian performance in this house. The old Theatre Ventadour passed out of existence, 1879.

Verdi (Giuseppe) composed the operas "ERNANI," "RIGOLETTO," "TRAVIATA," "TROVATORE," "BALLO IN MASCHERA," "AIDA," "OTELLO," "FALSTAFF," a splendid Requiem for Manzoni, two symphonies, six concertos for piano, an "Inno delle Nazioni" for the opening of the London Exposition, 1862, and numerous dramatic works besides those named, all of which combined to rank him as one of the world's greatest composers. Son of an innkeeper and grocer at Roncole, a hamlet near Busseto, in what was formerly the Duchy of Parma, his fondness for music was so conspicuous in childhood that his parents, though very poor, managed to get him a little spinet when he was seven years old, and procured him lessons from Baistrocchi, the organist of the Roncole church. In a year the child had learned as much as his teacher could impart, and at 10 became his successor as organist. Two years later he had the good fortune to arouse the admiration of Barezzi, his father's friend and patron in business, and a wealthy merchant of Busseto. Barezzi was president of the local Philharmonic Society, a keen amateur, and, having taken young Verdi into his business, soon placed him for further instruction with Provesi, who was at once conductor of the Philharmonic and organist of the Busseto church. At 16 he had the admiration and friendship of all Busseto. The local Monte di Pietà awarded him a stipend of $120 for two years, while Barezzi provided the means for lessons, and the young musician was shipped off to Milan. Basili, then director of the great conservatory, refused him a scholarship on the ground that he lacked talent, unable to foresee that the institution over which he presided would one day proudly adopt as its name Reale Conservatorio di "Giuseppe Verdi" di Milano, but Lavigna, cembalist of La Scala accepted him as a pupil, and the boy studied industriously under that master for the next two years. In 1833 Verdi returned to succeed his former teacher, Provesi, as church organist and conductor of the Philharmonic Society. Provesi's death, however, proved the occasion of a series of feuds in the little town, for the church wardens chose G. Ferrari as organist in preference to Verdi, and the Philharmonic Society thereupon withdrew from assisting at the church services, and removed its library and archives by force. The wardens finally obtained a decree abolishing the Philharmonic Society, but the Verdi faction remained as strong as ever. The young composer married Barezzi's eldest daughter in 1836, and then removed to Milan, taking with him his first opera "Oberto Conte di S. Bonifacio." His master, Lavigna, had interested him in a local singing society which was preparing to give "The Creation." From a volunteer cembalist, Verdi became conductor of this organization, and a performance given before the Archduke Ranieri and his court, won him immediate recognition among the Milanese musicians, and brought him the commission to compose this opera, which he worked on during his sojourn at Busseto. The opera was finally produced at La Scala, 1839, with fair success, and then the impresario, Merelli, engaged him as composer. Verdi was to compose an opera every eight months, and he was to receive $800 for each, and half the income from the copyright. The first of these works was a comic opera, "Un Giorno di Regno." It had to be composed during the months when Verdi was overwhelmed with grief at the death of his wife and two children. Naturally it proved a failure. Verdi resolved to write no more, and asked Merelli to release him from his contract. Merelli wisely agreed to let him do as he pleased, and then, some weeks later, gave him Solera's libretto for "Nabucco" (Nebuchadnezzar) to read for amusement. As the impresario had doubtless foreseen, Verdi could not resist the creative instinct, and on Mar. 9, 1842, this opera was performed with complete success, and with it, as Verdi was accustomed to say, his career as a composer may rightly be said to have begun. "I Lombardi alla prima Crociata," Feb. 11, 1843, La Scala, proved a still greater success, and marked the beginning of Verdi's unintentional association with the political agitations which were soon to convulse Italy. The Milanese detested the Austrian rule, and were quick to detect a passage which could be construed as against the government. Verdi was not a politician, nor was he inclined to any kind of activity aside from music other than that of a country gentleman, but there was a certain significance in the conspiracy in "Ernani" and in the character of Francis I, as depicted in "Le roi s'amuse" (which he was forced to alter to "Rigoletto"). Still later, the Neapolitan authorities forbade the use of the title "Gustavo III" for the opera now known as "Ballo in Maschera," and he was compelled to substitute "Richard, Governor of Boston," for the King, even when the work was produced at Rome. These things aroused apprehensions in the authorities which later events fully justified. Naples set the example of shouting "Viva Verdi," which might be understood to mean "viva Vittorio Emanuele Re Di Italia," and later, when Verdi was elected as a deputy to the Italian Parliament, was made Senator and Marchese di Busseto, these incidents of the stirring epoch preceding the unification of Italy were doubtless taken into consideration. To return to the chronological order of events in the master's life, he was married in 1842 to Giuseppina Strepponi, who had created the chief rôle in "Nabucco." In 1844 "Ernani" was given at La Fenice, Venice, where it created immense enthusiasm, and was produced at 15 other opera houses within the next nine months. "I duo Foscari" and "Giovanna d'Arco," produced respectively at the Argentina, Rome, and at La Scala, were not highly successful. "Attila," Mar. 17, 1846, La Scala, had a vogue partly due the opportunity again afforded for a demonstration against Austria, but "Macbeth," owing to the omission of a good tenor part, failed to please when given a year later at La Pergola, Florence. "I Masnadieri," to book based on Schiller's "Robbers," was composed for and performed at Her Majesty's London, July 22, 1847, and, while not highly successful, led to an invitation to Verdi to settle in London as a conductor. His Italian contracts made it impossible for him to accept this engagement. His next work, "Il Corsaro," was produced at Trieste, Oct. 26, 1848, and "La Battaglia di Legnano" at Rome, Jan. 27, 1849. Neither were successful. "Luisa Miller," Dec. 8, 1849, still holds its own in Italy, but it was Verdi's last work in the then accepted Italian style. "Stiffelio," Trieste, 1850 ("Guglielmo Welingrode"), and later known as "Aroldo," was a complete failure, but Verdi, who had just taken possession of his villa Sant' Agata, near Busseto, was now entering upon his most useful period. The first opera composed at Sant' Agata was "Rigoletto." Piave prepared the libretto based on Hugo's "Le roi s'amuse," and it was proposed that the opera should bear the same title. The Austrian police objected, and negotiations finally ended when the government agreed that, with certain changes, the work might be produced with a Duke in the chief rôle instead of a King. Verdi completed this score in 40 days, and it was performed Mar. 11, 1851, at Venice. Its popularity was immediate and still continues. "Trovatore," Apollo Theatre, Rome, Jan. 19, 1853, was likewise an immediate success, but the excessively fat Mme. Donatelli completely ruined "Traviata" when given at La Fenice, Venice, Mar. 6 of the same year. The following works are now of interest chiefly as indicating the gradual change in methods of dramatic treatment, which culminated in "Aïda": "I Vespri Siciliani," Paris, June 13, 1855; "Simon Boccanegra," Mar. 12, 1857, Venice; "Ballo in Maschera," Feb. 17, 1859, Rome; "Forza del Destino," Nov. 10, 1862, St. Petersburg; "Don Carlos," Mar. 11, 1867, Paris.

Commissioned by the Khedive of Egypt to compose an opera for the festivities incident to the opening of the Suez Canal, and allowed, besides an honorarium of $15,000, unlimited expense for its production, he evolved "Aïda," which was performed at Cairo, in the presence of the court and numerous visiting potentates Dec. 27, 1871. This is the work which has proved the inspiration of the Young Italian school of composers, and shows the closest approach to complete mastery of the orchestra, and intimate connection of text and music which had been produced by any Italian up to that time. "Otello," treated in the same spirit, proved a complete triumph for the composer when produced at Milan, 1887. During the next 13 years Verdi remained in silence, except for the Manzoni Requiem, 1874, but in 1893 the one event of the musical world was the performance of his "Falstaff," a comic opera which ranks with the world's best productions of its class. Admired and venerated in his old age, Verdi had received decorations and honours from all parts of the world. He lived quietly and simply, and, having survived his wife and all near relations, willed the bulk of his estate for the establishment of a home for aged and infirm musicians. As his end approached he expressed the wish that his funeral should be without display, but none the less 100,000 people assembled on that occasion to do honour to his memory. Besides the operas named, he composed a Pater Noster for two sops., con., ten., and bass; an Ave Maria for sop. and strings; a Mass; a Vesper Service; three Tantum Ergos; incidental music to Manzoni's tragedies, and a string quartet. Most of the works composed between the ages 13 and 18 have been lost. B. Oct. 9, 1813, Roncole; d. Jan. 27, 1901, Milan. Verkaufte Braut. Friedrich Smetana's three-act opera, known in the original Czech version as "Prodana Nevesta," and in English as "The Bartered Bride," was first performed at Prague. The first act reveals a kirmess in a Bohemian village at which the peasants are amusing themselves. Mary, daughter of the rich farmer Kruschina, takes no part in the merry-making, for she loves Hans, her father's man servant, and her parents have determined she shall marry Wenzel, son of Micha, a wealthy peasant from a neighbouring village. Vainly does Kezul, the marriage broker, plead with her for his client. She will have none of Wenzel, and frankly tells Kezul that she loves Hans. In the second act, Wenzel does his wooing in person, but with no better result. Mary upbraids him for attempting to force a marriage on a girl who cares nothing for him. Kezul thereupon seeks out Hans and offers him a sum of money if he will promise to withdraw as a suitor, and on learning that his rival is a son of Micha, Hans pockets the money, agreeing that "only Micha's son shall wed Mary." The villagers are disgusted with the lad's lack of spirit, for he makes this declaration publicly. In the next act, Wenzel has fallen in love with Esmeralda, a Spanish dancer who belongs to a troupe of strolling entertainers. The foolish swain agrees to play the part of a dancing bear in order to be near Esmeralda, and is just getting into his bearskin when his parents summon him to sign the marriage contract. He declines to obey them. Kezul shows Mary a document in which Hans expresses the wish that she marry "Micha's son," but she still loves Hans, and refuses to marry Wenzel, although when Hans presents himself, she scolds him for his lack of gallantry. When he tells her that he wishes her to marry "Micha's son," the girl at last consents. Now, however, Hans presents himself before Micha, who recognizes in him a son by an earlier marriage, who had been unable to get along with his step-mother, and had run away from home. As "Micha's son" he is still eligible to marry Mary, and the antics of Wenzel as a dancing bear have quite overcome any prejudice that old Kruschina felt in his favour, and the lovers are thus happily united.

Vienna is the seat of the Imperial Opera, an institution which is antedated only by those temporary organizations which assisted at the birth of this form of art in Florence and Venice. Works of Cavalli and Cesti dating from the first half of the 17th century now in the archives of the Imperial Court Library, where countless other valuable records of early musical activity are stored, give sufficient proof that the capital of the Holy Roman Empire had become familiar with "opera in musica" almost as soon as it had received definite form in its native Italy. Still earlier the Imperial Court Chapel and the choir of St. Stephen's had drawn the best musicians from all parts of the world to Vienna, and training schools had been established for the education of singers and instrumentalists. The Cantorei of St. Stephens, and the Convict of the Hofcapelle, where many important composers from the Haydns to Schubert were trained, were based on precisely the same general principles which governed the Matt-rise of France, the Cathedral School of England, or to point out an isolated example, the THOMASSCHULE at Leipsic. But with the beginnings of opera, Vienna assumed an even more commanding position in the world of music. Such great composers, teachers, and theorists as Porpora and Fux were called in to lend their talents to the establishment of opera, and to give the history of opera in Vienna would amount to that of music itself.

For the decade ending 1907 Gustav MAHLER had been chiefly responsible for the high standard maintained at the Imperial Opera. When he retired to become chief director at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, Felix WEINGARTNER, one of the world's foremost "prima donna conductors," was taken from the Berlin Royal Opera to succeed him. The first year of Weingartner's tenure of office was signalized by the production of "Red Gred," by Julius Bittner, the cordial reception of which made other Austrian composers hopeful of an early hearing. But if Vienna was compelled to draw upon Italy for its opera, it was the home of the string quartet and the symphony. Four of the greatest names in music, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert are intimately associated with the city, and of these the first three may be said to have given the symphony and chamber music their final FORM, while Schubert, the master of song, contributed some of his best work to the enrichment of the purely Viennese literature of this class. Besides the Hofoper, Vienna contains the Theater an der Wien and the Kärnthnerthor Theatre. It is the home of the GESELLSCHAFT DER MUSIKFREUNDE, one of the oldest and most important musical societies in the world. The AUGARTEN and the RE-DOUTENSAAL were famous for the concerts of the classic period, and the hall of the Gesellschaft is among the best known music centres of recent times. Besides many private music schools, Vienna possesses the excellent Conservatory which was founded by the Gesellschaft, and taught thousands of students from 1817, and which possessed a complete faculty for music, opera, and the drama. From 1851 the Conservatory was headed by Hellmesberger, and Ernst, Goldmark, Joachim, Richter, and Staudigl were among the most distinguished students during this golden period. The teaching staff averaged 60, and the enrollment 1000. The most important of the early Vienna publishing houses were those of ARTARIA and DIA-

BELLI. Of the piano makers the STREICHERS were among the best known.

Villanella. It. Rustic dance accompanied with singing, the melody usually lively and the rhythm well marked. When any words were used they were commonplace, and were similar to madrigals and ballets. The villanella or villotte and villancico were the precursors of the madrigal. The term later came into use to describe compositions in rustic style not intended for voices, which were embellished with variations on the original subject.

Villanesco. It. Rustic.

Villi. Giacomo Puccini's two-act fairy opera was composed for a competition instituted by the publisher Sonzogno, but failed to receive the award. The composer then revised the work, raised it from one to two acts, and it was first performed May 31, 1884, at the Teatro dal Verme, Milan. Although the "Wilis" or "Villi" are supposed to have been Servian fairies, the composer lays the scene of his opera in the Black Forest. The opera opens with the betrothal of Roberto to Anna, daughter of Guglielmo Wulf, and these three rôles, ten., sop., and bar., respectively, are the only solo parts, the rest of the action devolving on choruses of fairies and peasants. After the betrothal Roberto goes to Mayence, where he plunges into dissipation, prolonging his absence until Anna despairs of ever seeing him again, and finally dies of a broken heart. The second act reveals Anna's funeral. Roberto returns in time to meet the cortège, and is overcome with horror at the result of his folly. The fairies then come upon the scene. It is their duty to punish faithless lovers, and in aid of this mission they bring Anna's ghost to upbraid Roberto. In the midst of a wild dance by the Villi, Anna embraces her lover, who instantly falls dead at her feet.

Villotte. It. First secular pieces in harmony after the revolt against the formalism of counterpoint headed by Monteverde. Every liberty in harmony was used in this kind of composition, while church music was only written according to strict rules. Music of this class, to which the Villancio and Villanella also belonged, and from which sprang the madrigal, was detested by such scholars as Morley, who wrote, condemning the Villotte: "even disallowances may be taken at pleasure, uniting a clownish music to a clownish matter."

Villoteau (Guillaume André) wrote part of a notable work on Egypt while a member of the commission of savants who accompanied Napoleon there, and numerous works on music; pupil of the Mans Maitrise, he later sang ten. in the Paris Opéra chorus, studied at the Sorbonne, etc. B. 1759, Bellême; d. 1839, Tours.

B. Sept. 19, 1852, Durham, Eng.; add. London. George Frederick composed the cantata with orchestra "Sir Humphrey Gilbert," conducted and played organ, Sunderland, from 1882; pupil Leipsic Conservatory. B. Vinning (Louisa) played harp and sang in English concerts, debut in childhood; pupil of Mori. B. Devonshire, Eng.; m. J. S. C. Heywood, 1865, and retired.

Viol. Bow instrument not unlike the modern violin in shape, though somewhat larger, and having five or six strings, common throughout Europe from the 11th century until superseded by the improved instruments developed by the Cremonese makers. The DOUBLEBASS is the only viol to be found in the modern orchestra, although viols were formerly made in several sizes to correspond to the modern string quartet. A set of these instruments was called a "chest" or "consort" of viols.

Viola. Tenor VIOLIN, having four strings, the two lowest covered with wire, and all tuned in fifths, the highest sounding a'. The viola is only slightly larger than the violin, and the technique of the instrument is practically the same, but as the notes are much rougher in quality, and have a veiled tone, the viola is rarely used as a solo instrument. In the hands of such a master as Paganini it must have sounded to better advantage. It is certain that he thought well of it, since he played it, and requested Berlioz to compose for it.

Viola Bastarda. Bass viol which developed into the BARYTON.

Viola d'Amore. Tenor VIOL having from seven to 14 sympathetic metal strings in addition to the seven strings which were run over a finger board for stopping. The sympathetic strings give a beautiful effect, and though the players on this instrument died out for a time, and were by no means common in 1908, it can no longer be classed as obsolete. An obbligato part for viola d'amore occurs in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots."

Viola da Braccio or da Spalla. Obsolete six-stringed viol which has given way before the modern VIOLA, which it resembled in compass. It was called "di Braccio" and "di Spada" when held along the arm or to the shoulder for playing.

Viola da Gamba. A viol closely corresponding to the modern 'cello in compass, but having six strings and a fretted fingerboard. It formed the bass of a "consort" of viols, and was still played in 1908 by a few lovers of old music. The name is also used for an organ stop of 8-ft. pitch.

Viola di Bordone. BARYTON.

Viola Pomposa. It. Species of VIOLA DA GAMBIA invented by John Sebastian Bach. It had five strings, the four lower ones tuned in fifths like the 'cello, while the fifth one was tuned in E, thus greater facility in the execution of extended passages was allowed. As the skill of 'cello players increased, the viola pomposa became unnecessary.

Viole (Rudolph) played and taught piano; composed. B. 1815, Schochwitz, Mansfeld; d. 1867, Berlin.

Violetta. Small VIOL.

Violetta Marina. It. Stringed instrument, the tone of which was similar to the VIOLA D'AMORE. Called violetta piccola and Hautecontre by the French.

Violin. The most important of modern solo and orchestral instruments, and the only one which is capable of simulating all the effects of the human voice save that of articulate speech. The name is the diminutive for viol, and it is somewhat smaller than the older instrument from which it was evolved. The compass is from g to c''', with all intermediate shades of tone, while its power for brilliant effects, big tone, or the most delicate pianissimo is practically unlimited in the hands of a skilful player. Technically, the violin may be described as a wooden resonance box, pierced with two f-shaped sound holes, the back and belly brought into harmonious vibration by means of a bridge. At one end is the neck, which affords a finger-board for three gut and one wire spun string, which are tuned in fifths, g, d', a', e''. These strings pass over a bridge about midway between the sound holes, and are fastened at the lower end to a tail, which is in turn attached to the lower part of the body or resonance box. At the upper end the strings fasten to tuning pegs, by which their tension, and consequently their pitch, may be altered or maintained. When played by the bow, the bow, well charged with rosin, is drawn across a string or strings with the right hand, while the strings are stopped with the fingers of the left hand. The harmonic register is obtained by touching the strings lightly instead of stopping them. The pizzicato effect is the result of plucking the strings with the fingers, and the col legno by striking them with the wood of the bow. The use of the sordino or mute placed on the bridge gives a peculiar mellow or veiled tone. The history of the violin may be traced to the RAVANASTRON, played in Ceylon many centuries before the Christian era. Oriental variations of this instrument include the Chinese fiddle or Urheen, the Kemangeh, which is common in Moslem countries, the Rebab of Egypt, from which the early European Rebec may be descended. From the Rebec or Crwth were developed the Fithele, Vitula, and finally the Viol. From the viol to the violin was but a step. That step was first taken either by Andrea AMATI or by Gasparo da SALO, and the final progress in the perfection of the instrument may be further traced in the biographical notices of the STRADUARI, the GUARNERII and RUGGIERI, STAINER, KLOTZ, GAND, LUPOT, VUILLAUME, and the evolution of the bow in the life of TOURTE. See Hart's "The Violin." "Violin making as it was and is," E. H. Allen; "Les Instruments a Archet," Vidal; "Geschichte der Bogen-Instrumente," Rühlmann.

Violin Steg. Ger. Bridge of a violin.

Violon. Fr. VIOLIN; in Germany the same word is used for the DOUBLE-BASS.

Violoncello. It. "Little Violone" or bass. The instrument referred to throughout this book, and popularly, as the 'CELLO. Like the violin, of which it forms the bass, it has four strings, tuned in fifths, of which the highest is a. In concerted music the compass usually extends to a', and in the hands of soloists an octave higher, so that while the lower notes are scored on the bass clef, the upper notes are placed on the C or G clef. The 'cello was evolved from the viol da gamba. It is one of the most important of solo instruments, having an indescribably rich singing tone, capable of every shade of tone and expression like the violin, and as it affords greater facility for rapid passages than the double bass, such parts are usually written for it, while the larger instrument is assigned the fundamental bass an octave below.

Violone. It. DOUBLEBASS.

Viotti (Giovanni Battista) composed a violin concerto, No. 22, in A minor, still in repertoire, and in all 29 concertos, 51 duets, 21 string quartets, and much other chamber music, being first to adapt the concerto to the sonata form, with full orchestral accompaniment; was the foremost violinist of his day, and the last representative of the classical Italian school, and the teacher of Rode, Baillet, and others. Son of the village blacksmith of Fontanetto, his bishop discovered in him precocious musical talent, and sent him to Turin, where he had lessons of Pugnani, played in the court orchestra, and in 1780 made his first concert tour in company with his master. Declining the post of court violinist to Catherine II of Russia, he settled in Paris, but, disgusted by the success of a rival of inferior powers at the Concert Spirituel, resolved to abandon public concerts, although he led the orchestra established by the Princes de Conti and de Sourbise, and played at court. In 1788 he joined Léonard, Marie Antoinette's hair-dresser, in founding the Italian Opera in Paris, but, having lost his fortune in the French Revolution, was obliged to resume violin playing in London. In 1795 he managed the Italian Opera and Opera concerts in London, but, failing to achieve a financial success, drifted into the wine business. In 1802 he played at the Conservatoire, Paris, and was most cordially received, and in 1819-22 he was director of the Paris Opéra, but without being able to restore its former prestige. Granted a pension of $1200, he returned to London, playing and giving concerts at his home, and accepting a few pupils, but without ever overcoming his aversion to appearing at public entertainments. B. March 23, 1753, Piedmont; d. Mar. 10, 1824, London. See biographies by Fayolle, 1810, Paris, Baillet, 1825, Paris.

have been so named because often played by young ladies (long before Queen Elizabeth's day). There was one string to each note, and these were set in action by means of quill, leather, or metal plectra attached to "jacks." The compass was usually about three octaves, and the tone very delicate and sweet.

Vittoria, da (Tomaso Ludovico) composed an "Officium Defunctorum" for six voices for the Empress Maria, Madrid, 1605, and much other church music which ranked him second only to Palestrina. A native of Spain, he became chapelmaster to the Collegium Germanicum, Rome, 1573, and it is assumed from his style that he must have mastered the contrapuntal lore of the Netherlanders at an earlier period, and to have come under the influence of Palestrina, without, however, actually having been his pupil. From 1575 to 1589 Vittoria was choir-master at the church of St. Apollinaris and then became vice chapelmaster of the court at Madrid. During his sojourn in Rome he was on terms of close intimacy with Palestrina, and it is probable that he was raised to the priesthood there. His compositions include: a book of motets for four to eight voices, Venice, 1572; a "Liber primus" of Masses, Psalms, and a Magnificat, Venice, 1576; Magnificats and Antiphons, 1589, Rome; a set of hymns for four voices and four Psalms, 1581, Rome, which therefore preceded and may have inspired Palestrina's Hymnal; motets for 4, 5, 6, 8 and 12 voices, Rome, 1583; motets for all the feasts of the year, Rome, 1588; Nine Masses dedicated to Philip II of Spain, four to six voices, Rome, 1583; Officium Hebdomadae Sanctae, containing the Impropria, Lamentations, and Turbæ of the Passion, Rome, 1585; a book of Masses dedicated to Cardinal Albert, in recognition of the composer's appointment as chaplain to the Imperial court, Rome, 1592, and finally the requiem for Empress Maria already mentioned. Vogler (Abbé Georg Joseph) composed in all forms; wrote on theory; was the most celebrated organist, and one of the best teachers and conductors of his generation; but by his radical views and assumption of superiority made many enemies, of whom Mozart was the foremost; was honoured by many princes, and received the titles of Apostolic Prothonotary, Chamberlain, and knight of the Golden Spur from the Pope. His father and stepfather were violinists, and at 10 Vogler had contrived a new method of fingering the organ, had mastered several instruments, and while a pupil of the Jesuits of Wurzburg, was in great demand as a musician. A ballet produced at the Mannheim court theatre so pleased the Elector that he provided means for the composer to study in Italy with Padre Martini, and later with Valotti. In 1773 he was ordained priest while in Rome, but returned to Mannheim two years later to become court chaplain and second chapelmaster. Occasional tours as virtuoso organist so enhanced his reputation that 7000 tickets were sold for his recital at Amsterdam in 1785, the receipts at a single London concert were nearly $60,000, and in Paris he gave the 15,000 livres of receipts at a recital in St. Sulpice to the poor. For 13 years from 1786 he was court chapelmaster at Stockholm, and on his departure received a pension from the Swedish government, and then settled for a time in Denmark, where he wrote his "Choral System," which was distributed by the Danish government to the organists of that country. In 1806 he produced his best known opera "Castor and Pollux" in Munich, on the occasion of the marriage of Eugène Beauharnais to Augusta of Bavaria. In 1807 he settled in Darmstadt, the Grand Duke Louis I having given him as an inducement the titles of chapelmaster and privy counsellor for church affairs, the Order of Merit of the first class, a house, meals from the ducal kitchen and 3000 florins per annum. In addition to the activities indicated, Vogler was an adept at organ building, and was first to apply the "Trias Harmonica," or pedal organ quint, as a substitute for the 32-foot stop, thus avoiding the expense of large pipes, and to introduce free reeds. As a teacher he formed the composers Meyerbeer and Weber, the singer Mme. Lange, and the organist Knecht. The cantata "Ino," the melodrama "Lampredo," and the overture and entr'actes for "Hamlet," Mannheim, 1779; "Albert III von Baiern," Munich, 1780; "La Kermesse," Paris Comédie Italien, 1783, and the comic opera "Der Admiral," 1810, are a few of his dramatic works. Wagner (Ernst David) composed and wrote essays on music; was cantor, organist, and music director. B. 1806, Dramburg, Pomerania; d. 1883, Berlin.

Wagner (Wilhelm Richard) composed the operas "TANNHAUSER," "LOHENGRIN," "RIENZI," "FLIEGENDE HOLLÄNDER," the comic opera "MEISTERSINGER," the "action" "TRISTAN UND ISOLDE," the Tetralogy of music-dramas known collectively as the "RING OF THE NIBELUNGS," the sacred-stage-festival-play "PARSIFAL"; was at once the most sensational, revolutionary, and best advertised German composer of the 19th century, and one of the greatest. Son of a clerk in the law courts, who became Chief of Police in Leipsic during the occupation of that city by the French under Marshal Davoust, Wagner's family inclined to the drama rather than music, although Albert, the composer's elder brother, sang ten. in Breslau. Wagner was but six months old when his father died. His mother subsequently married Ludwig Geyer, actor, playwright, and portrait painter, with whom the family removed to Dresden, where Geyer was a member of the court theatre. There the boy attended the Kreuzschule, received some piano lessons, and heard "Freischütz," which deeply impressed him. On the death of Geyer, 1821, at a time when Wagner was seven years old, the family was maintained by the "liebes Mütterchen," as Wagner always affectionately called his mother; but in 1827 his sister Rosalie obtained an engagement at the Leipsic Stadt theatre, and the family returned to that city. Wagner had already made a German version of the 12 books of the Odyssey, and had attempted a bombastic tragedy on Shakespearian lines. But he was far from being an "infant prodigy" in music. At no time in his life was he able to play his own scores at the piano; he never acquired the mastery of any instrument of music, and his best friends considered his singing atrocious. In his 16th year he attended a Gewandhaus performance, and on hearing Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, determined to become a musician. For a week he studied a borrowed copy of Logier's book on theory, the difficulties of which only stimulated him to further endeavours. His first attempts at composition were string quartets. On the strength of these he obtained permission to receive instruction from the organist, Gottlieb Müller, while a student in the University. As a piano pupil, Wagner had preferred to attempt overtures rather than thump away at five finger exercises, and as a student of theory he wanted to compose in the larger forms instead of copying exercises. Fortunately, he soon came under the tutelage of Theodor Weinlig, cantor of the Thomasschule, who gave him a thorough training in counterpoint. Then his piano sonata was published by Breitkopf and Härtel, and he composed a fantasia for piano (F sharp minor), a polonaise, and a concert overture with fugue which had the honour of performance at the Gewandhaus, 1832. The following year his symphony in C was played at the Gewandhaus. A second symphony was begun, 1834, but never completed. So much for Wagner's musical beginnings. His first opera, "The Wedding" ("Die Hochzeit"), was composed to his own book, 1832. By advice of his sister Rosalie, who considered it immoral, he destroyed the text, without having completed the score. A second opera, "Die Feen," or "The Fairies," though accepted by the Leipzig Opera, was not performed until five years after the composer's death. He based his libretto on a tale by Gozzi, and imitated the music of Marschner and Weber. In 1834 Wagner became director of the Magdeburg opera, and while there wrote and composed "Das Liebesverbot," based on "Measure for Measure." This he attempted to produce at his own benefit. The company was bankrupt, however, the artists quarreled among themselves and, after a wretched bungle, the work was retired. At the age of 23, or, to be exact, Nov. 24, 1836, Wagner married Minna Planer, a pretty actress of Magdeburg, with whom he lived 25 years, separating from her four years before her death, which occurred in 1866. In Jan., 1837, Wagner became director of the Königsberg theatre. Here he was again thrown out of employment by the bankruptcy of the company, and in the fall, became director at Riga, Russia, where his wife obtained employment as an actress. In Riga he attempted but did not complete a comic opera based on the Arabian Nights, entitled "The Happy Bear Family," and, more important than this, sketched out his plot for "Rienzi." Wagner had left many creditors in Königsberg. He became deeply involved in debt at Riga. In 1839 he managed to escape his creditors, was smuggled across the Russian frontier by his friends, rejoined his wife, who had preceded him in disguise, and set sail for London in a small vessel from Pillau, meaning to make his fortune in Paris as a composer. The voyage lasted nearly a month, and the weather was so bad that the Wagners were very ill, but this acquaintance with the sea inspired "Tristan und Isolde." From London the Wagners went to Boulogne, where Meyerbeer was then spending the summer, and after obtaining letters of introduction to Paris managers and publishers from this composer (whom he afterwards shamefully abused), Wagner proceeded to Paris. Disappointed in the hope of winning recognition from the Parisians, Wagner was compelled to support himself by arranging dance music, writing songs, novelettes, articles, etc., and was so desperately poor that he sought employment in the chorus of a cheap Boulevard theatre, but was rejected on the ground that he could not sing well enough. But the period of obscurity, which was less endurable to Wagner than poverty, was soon to end. In 1842 "Rienzi" was performed in the new Dresden Opera House. He had been obliged to secure Meyerbeer's influence to insure its production, but its success was so great that within ten weeks he had the pleasure of seeing "The Flying Dutchman" put on. Thereafter, Wagner was a man to be reckoned with. Torrents of abuse and extravagant praise henceforth greeted each new work. He could be no longer ignored, and his appointment soon followed as chapelmaster of the Dresden Opera at $1125 per annum. There he remained for six years from 1843. The Biblical scene for three choirs of male voices, "Das Liebesmahl der Apostel" (The Lovefeast of the Apostles), was composed during this period for the Dresden Liedertafel, of which he was conductor, and in 1845 his "Tannhäuser" was produced. Lohengrin was completed next, and "Meistersinger" sketched out, but in 1849 he became involved in a revolutionary movement, took part in an actual insurrection in Dresden, and was obliged, on the suppression of disorder, to escape from the country. Whether he really aided in building a barricade, or waved a red flag to rally the rioters, or burned down the opera house, is not known, and will not be until Wagner's long autobiography is published. At any rate a general alarm was sent out by the police of Dresden, May 16, 1849, directing that "Royal Chapelmaster Richard Wagner" be arrested on sight. By this time Wagner was safe with Liszt in Weimar, and that devoted friend, having heard he was about to be arrested there, provided him with the means of reaching Zurich. For the next six years Wagner composed nothing. The chief, most powerful, and most generous of his friends was Liszt. In enemies he was rich, and he hit them often and hard in the essays and books with which he was beginning the propaganda of his art theories. These were, to give the English titles: "Art and Revolution," 1849; "Art and Climate," "Art Work of the Future," 1850; "Opera and Drama," 1851; "Judaism in Music," 1852; and a "Communication to my Friends," in which he sets forth certain autobiographical facts, and first records his plans for the Nibelung Festival. After three years of exile the Tetralogy, or, as it was first designed, Trilogy of the Ring, began to take shape. Although composed in the order in which they are performed, the book of "Die Götterdämmerung," which he meant to call "Siegfried's Death," was written first, then "Siegfried," which he spoke of as "Young Siegfried," then "Die Walküre," and finally "Das Rheingold." It is to be observed that in treating the Nibelung myth, Wagner allowed himself the utmost license. He followed the dictates of his own dramatic instinct rather than the "Nibelungenlied" or the older Sagas, and the pictures he presents of the Norse or Teuton mythology are not more faithful to the religious conceptions of his remote ancestors than was "Parsifal," with its jumble of Christian mysticism to the religion of his contemporaries. Music to "Das Rheingold" was completed, 1854, and he began work on "Die Walküre," on which he was occupied until 1856, his labours being interrupted by an engagement in London

as conductor of eight Philharmonic concerts in 1855. Returning again to Zurich, he wrote and composed "Tristan und Isolde," gave concerts, and conducted in Zurich, and arranged for the Paris production of "Tannhäuser," ordered by Napoleon III. The Paris production was a failure, because he declined to compose a ballet for the occasion, but the fact that he should have been accorded such an honour (due the influence of Princess Pauline von Metternich, wife of the Austrian ambassador to France), was largely responsible for the revocation of his exile, except as regarded Saxony. Wagner then visited Vienna, where he heard his opera "Lohengrin" for the first time, and had "Tristan" placed in rehearsal. A few months later, while in Moscow, he was informed that the Vienna Opera had been obliged to abandon this work, after 57 rehearsals, because it was unsingable! Concluding his Russian concerts, Wagner, now separated from his wife, returned to Switzerland and settled in the home of his friends the Willes at Mariafeld, to begin work on "Meistersinger." Having given a true and noble picture of the Minnesingers in "Tannhäuser," it was the composer's wish to paint with equal fidelity the Song Guilds of a later age, — to disprove at the same time the notion of German critics that he could not write melody, and to amuse himself by poking fun at the pedants. Creditors in Vienna, where Wagner had accumulated a large indebtedness, threatened to descend on him in Switzerland, so he hastily retired to Stuttgart. Financial troubles, however, were soon to become a thing of the past. King Ludwig of Bavaria, who had just ascended the throne of his fathers, had read the preface to Wagner's "Nibelung Ring" (the text of the Tetralogy), and sent a messenger to Stuttgart in search of him. In Munich the monarch informed Wagner that he was determined to aid him in his plans for the reformation of opera, and directed him to begin work on the Ring of the Nibelungs, which should be produced at the court opera as soon as completed. The politicians and musicians were equally incensed at the favour shown Wagner and a popular demonstration was organized against him, the upshot of which was that the King requested Wagner to withdraw from court, although remaining as much his devoted friend as ever, and allowing him a pension of nearly $4000 per annum. The composer then settled at Tribschen, Lake Lucerne. His home was luxuriously appointed, he wore eccentric costumes of costly silken fabrics, and installed as his chatelaine Frau Cosima von Bülow, daughter of Liszt by the Countess d'Agoult, and wife of Hans von Bülow. Both were eventually freed of former ties by divorce, and in 1870 they were married. Meantime amid these pleasant surroundings he had completed "Meistersinger," "Rheingold," "Walküre," and "Siegfried." King Ludwig dared not build the theatre for which Wagner was hoping, but there were Wagner societies in many parts of the world, the composer was receiving propositions to take up his residence in London and Chicago, and the great and increasing interest made it evident that the ideal theatre was to be soon realized. Finally, Wagner hit upon BAYREUTH, the former seat of Bavarian royalty, the geographical centre of Germany, and a quaint old place of 20,000 inhabitants as the best site for his new theatre. The municipality not only gave him the land on which to erect the Festspielhaus, but likewise the land for his home, since celebrated as Villa Wahnfried. Although his plan for raising funds was denounced by the German press as a "swindling stock-jobbing scheme," money was coming in, and in 1872 the foundations of the Festspielhaus were laid. Concerts in aid of the building fund were given in various parts of the world; King Ludwig, at a critical moment, donated $50,000, and in Aug. 1876 the "Ring of the Nibelung" was given a festival production in complete form. Some of the music dramas had already been performed to gratify King Ludwig. "Rheingold," Aug. 25, 1869, "Walküre," June 24, 1870, but without Wagner's supervision. Although a notable success, the festival left a deficit of $37,500, part of which was paid off by a London concert, the rest gradually, by royalties on performances of the Ring now permitted elsewhere. Wagner next set to work on "Parsifal," which was completed and produced at Bayreuth, 1882. Then the composer, in a vain effort to recover his health, settled for a time in Venice. Besides the works mentioned, Wagner composed the overtures "Polonia," "Columbus," "Rule Britannia," a "New Year's Cantata," incidental music to "Der Burgeist," "Huldigungsmarch" (completed by Raff); "Siegfried Idyll" in honour of his son's first birthday, 1870, "Kaisermarsch," 1870, "Festival March" for the Philadelphia Exposition, 1876; "Gelegenheits Cantata" for unveiling a monument to King Friedrich, 1843; "Gruss an den König," 1843, "Am Weber's Grabe," double quartette and funeral march for Weber, 1844; songs, the musical burlesque "A Capitulation," which had the effect of enraging the French people against the composer, although it was directed more against the Germans. During the last six years of his life most of his literary work appeared in the organ of the Wagner societies, "Bayreuther Blätter." Among these essays may be noted: "What is German?"; "Religion and Art," "Modern Public and Popularity," "The Public in Time and Space," "A Retrospect of the Stage Play Festival of 1876," "The Stage Consecration Play in Bayreuth, 1882," "An Account of the Performance of a Youthful Work," "On Composing Poetry and Music," "On the Composing of Operatic Poetry and Music in Particular," "On the Application of Music to the Drama." Mention should also be made of his admirable book on conducting. B. May 22, 1813, Leipzig; d. of erysipelas, Venice, Feb. 13, 1883. See his letters to Liszt, Uhlig, Fischer, Heine, etc.; biographies by Dannreuther, H. T. Finck, G. Kobbé, Pohl, Tappert, Jullien, Glasenapp, and Ellis. Cosima assumed charge of the

Waits were at once the watchmen and town musicians, possibly so called because it was their duty to "wait" or attend on the magistrates and other officials on ceremonial occasions, who seem to have been employed in England until the accession of the House of Stuart, corresponding to the Zinkenisten of Germany, and like them, playing coarse reed instruments. Then the name was transferred to the country musicians who sang carols and gave serenades during the Christmas holidays. The name was also applied to a primitive kind of oboe, and to a Fa-la for four voices composed by Jeremy

Savile during the reign of Charles II, and still sung by madrigal societies.

Waldstein, von (Count Ferdinand Ernst Gabriel) was a noted amateur and patron of music to whom Beethoven dedicated his piano sonata in C, Op. 53. A novice of the Deutscher Orden, he became acquainted with the great composer while in attendance at the Electoral Court at Bonn. No composer of modern times enjoyed so varied and picturesque career as Wallace. Son and pupil of an Irish bandmaster, he often led the orchestra in the Dublin Theatre in boyhood, and after hearing Paganini, 1831, gave his whole time to perfecting his technique on the violin. He played his own concerto at a Dublin concert in 1834, but tiring of the Irish capital, left for London, accompanied by his wife, born

Kelly, and her sister. Mrs. Wallace charged him with making love to the sister, and promptly left him, and the young musician then emigrated to Australia. 100 sheep from Governor Sir John Burke were part payment for a concert given in Sydney. Then he wandered into New Zealand, where he was rescued from death by the daughter of a native chief, and embarked on a whaler. He narrowly escaped death in a mutiny, and next appeared in India, where he won the admiration of the Begum of Oude. Tours of Latin America then occupied him until 1845, when he reached London, met Fitzball, Balfe's old librettist, and produced "Maritana." The next 14 years were spent in Germany, and he composed chiefly piano music. His eyesight failing, just as he had been commissioned to compose an opera for Paris, he made a concert tour of North and South America, and then settled in New York, where he lost all his fortune in the failure of a piano factory. Then he resumed his career as a composer in London. His second wife was the pianist Helene Stöpel, who survived him. B. June 1, 1814, Waterford, Ireland; d. Oct. 12, 1865, Chateau de Bagen, Haute Garonne, France.

Wally. Alfredo Catalani's four-act opera, to book by Luigi Illica, based on von Hillern's novel, was first performed in Turin, 1892, where it failed, but was revived with success in Buenos Ayres, 1904. The scene is laid in the Tyrol in the early part of the 19th century, and the first act represents the mountain scenery about the cabin of Stromminger, a hunter of the village of Hochstoff. Friends gather to celebrate the hunter's 70th birthday, and among them is Gellner, a noted marksman, who loves Wally, Strommingler's daughter. Hagenbach, a sharpshooter from the village of Sölden, comes in, and his boastings so irritate old Stromminger that a quarrel results, and Hagenbach strikes the old man, knocking him down. Gellner tells Stromminger that Wally loves Hagenbach, which arouses the old man to a fury. He promises Wally to Gellner, and when the girl refuses her consent, drives her from home. The next act takes place in Sölden. Wally has inherited her father's fortune, and has many suitors, but declines them all. Gellner and Hagenbach enter, and Hagenbach begins a flirtation with Afra, landlady of the inn. Wally insults Afra, Hagenbach, to avenge his sweetheart, undertakes to make Wally kiss him. The Dance of the Kiss follows, at the end of which Wally kisses Hagenbach. From the laughter of the spectators, Wally learns that Hagenbach has been making sport of her, and turning to Gellner, who still loves her, she demands that he kill Hagenbach. The third act represents Wally's room on the one side, and the village street of Hochstoff on the other. As Hagenbach comes along the street, Gellner springs from a hiding place, and forces his rival over a precipice. Hagenbach calls for help, and Wally, seized with remorse, saves his life at great peril to her own. The fourth act represents the interior of a mountain hut. Hagenbach comes there to declare his love for Wally, and both are so interested that they do not realize that a storm has arisen, which hides from view the path by which they might have descended.

An able musician, he was a member of the court orchestra of the Elector Palatine, but being wounded in the Battle of Rosbach, where his master was opposed to Frederick the Great, he retired, and entered the service of the Prince-Bishop of Cologne. There he became steward and court councillor, but was deprived of office because he neglected his duties for music. EDMUND and FRIDOLIN, sons by his first marriage, were both talented in music. His wandering life after his second marriage is sufficiently referred to in the notice of CARL MARIA FRIEDRICH ERNST. B. 1734; younger brother of the first FRIDOLIN. Edmund became a good theoretical musician, but was not great as either violinist or conductor; was also painter and engraver. Fridolin conducted; sang; was pupil of Haydn. B. 1761; son of FRANZ ANTON and half brother of CARL MARIA FRIEDRICH ERNST.

Weber, von (Freiherr Carl Maria Friedrich Ernst) composed the operas "ABU HASSAN," "FREISCHÜTZ," "EURYANTHE," "PRECIOSA," and "Oberon," which were at once the beginning of German opera as a national institution, and of the Romantic School, making him the precursor of both Wagner and Schumann; was a first-class pianist and composer, and a clever musical litterateur. His mother had sung in such rôles as "Constanze" in Mozart's "Entführung" and his father FRANZ ANTON, a man of fine musical taste, a virtuoso on the viola and doublebass, but a strolling player by preference, naturally brought the children up in an atmosphere of music and the theatre. They with his half brother EDMUND, were naturally his first instructors, but at 10 he was also the pupil of J.

P. Heuschkel, and in the course of their wanderings, the family settled for a time in Salzburg, where the boy was entered in the cathedral choir, then conducted by MICHAEL HAYDN. For the next six months Weber enjoyed the privilege of free lessons from that learned composer, and then the family moved to Munich, where he had as teachers Valesi and Kalcher. His first published compositions were a set of fuguetas in 1798, while under the tutelage of Haydn. Under Kalcher's tuition he composed a mass, chamber music, and the opera "Die Macht der Liebe und des Weins," creditable work for a boy of 12, no doubt, but the manuscript was either lost or destroyed by the composer in after years. At this period he formed the acquaintance of Senefelder, the inventor of lithography, engraved his own variations dedicated to Kalcher, Op. 2, and fancied that he had discovered important improvements in lithography, which so interested his father that he at once took his family to Freiberg, in order to begin experiments on a large scale,—and abandoned the idea as soon as he had reached his journey's end. In Freiberg, however, the Weber family encountered Ritter von Steinsberg, head of a theatrical company, and author of an opera book which he cheerfully turned over to the 13 year old composer. Nov. 13, 1800, this work was produced as "Das Waldmädchen," but hardly equalled the extravagant claims which had been made for it, although it was afterwards performed in Vienna, St. Petersburg, and other music centres. The boy again turned his attention to lithography, and offered his process to Artaria, who did not reply to his letters. In the autumn of 1801 the family had returned to Salzburg, where Weber composed his next opera, "Peter Schmoll und seine Nachbarn," which was produced two years later in Augsburg, without success. In 1804 he became the pupil of Abbé VOGLER, and by the advice of that learned musician devoted nearly two years to study, without attempting compositions in the larger forms. Owing to Vogler's influence, he obtained the appointment of conductor at the Breslau Theatre while in his 18th year. This post he resigned after two years of hard work, supported himself for a time giving lessons, but soon obtained the post of Musik-Intendant to Duke Eugene of Württemberg. His only symphonies, two in C major, were composed during this period, but the Napoleonic wars disrupted the court, and Weber next became private secretary and music master to Duke Ludwig at Stuttgart. Three years of dissipation followed. He recast "Das Waldmädchen"; composed 13 songs, the piano quartet in B flat, and "Der Erste Ton" for solo, chorus, and orchestra, but was led into financial difficulties by the singer Margarethe Lang, and just on the eve of the production of his remodelled opera "Silvana," was thrown into prison, charged with having sold a court appointment which carried exemption from military service. Although his conduct was satisfactorily explained, he was banished, and after giving a concert of his own compositions in Mannheim, he settled in Darmstadt with his old master, Abbé Vogler. "Silvana" was finally given with fair success in Frankfurt, 1810, and in 1811 he achieved his first real success as a dramatic composer with the singspiel "Abu Hassan," Munich. Then followed a series of concert tours, which ended for a time when he settled in Prague to reorganize the opera, and having been familiar with every detail of the stage from childhood, he soon accomplished a salutary revolution. He restored discipline, perfected the stage settings, and managed every detail, conducting with a degree of enthusiasm and precision then unusual, and producing many new works. This engagement closed with a triumphal performance of his cantata "Kamp und Sieg" in celebration of the Battle of Waterloo. Count Brühl, Spontini's old antagonist in Berlin, vainly endeavored to secure Weber's appointment at this time to a chapelmastership, and Weber then accepted a call to a similar post in

Dresden, where he passed the remainder of his life. The following year, Nov. 4, 1817, he married Caroline Brandt, a young actress with whom he had long been in love, and who had taken the chief rôle in his "Silvana" in Frankfurt. The most important period of his life as a musician began auspiciously. He took his bride on a concert tour at which both were everywhere cordially received, and began to compose "Freischütz," his greatest opera, which was not completed until 1820. In the intervals of official duties, he composed chamber music, scored the music for "Preciosa," (Wolff's play) in three weeks, and began the comic opera "Die drei Pintos," (completed by Mahler). In 1821 the incidental music to "Preciosa" was given in Berlin for the first time, and on June 18 of that year, "Freischütz" was produced. Weber himself conducted both rehearsals and performance of the opera, which aroused the Germans to the greatest demonstration of approval ever known in Berlin up to that time. The reception given the composer on his concert tours indicated that he was everywhere more thoroughly appreciated than in Dresden, and he was tempted to accept the chief conductorship at Cassel, where he had been offered an increase of salary. In 1822, however, "Freischütz" made him immensely popular at home, and so established his reputation that he was commissioned to compose a new work for the Kärnthnerthor Theatre in Vienna. "Euryanthe" was selected as the subject. While he was at work on this opera, he received an invitation to compose a new work for Paris. "Euryanthe" was not favourably received by the Viennese, although Weber had himself had been accorded ovations when he conducted the first three performances. Greatly discouraged at the result of what he had hoped would be his best work, and already in the grip of consumption, which had killed his mother, and was soon to carry him off, Weber's chief anxiety was to make suitable provision for his family. Kemble offered $5000 for an opera for London, and invited him to conduct "Freischütz" and "Preciosa." Warned by his physician that while he might live for years in Italy, a sojourn in England would end his existence in a few months, he nevertheless accepted, and "Oberon" having been selected as the subject, he began the study of English to qualify himself for the task before him. In 1826 he started for London, lingered for a time in Paris, and reached his destination Mar. 5. The work was performed with great success on April 12, and Weber conducted the first twelve performances. Although his strength was failing rapidly, he likewise appeared at a number of concerts. His last work, the song "From Chindara's warbling fount," was sung to the composer's accompaniment on May 26. His last public appearance took place four days later. B. Dec. 18, 1786, Eutin, Oldenberg; d. June 5, 1826, London. Besides the works named he left the unfinished opera "Rübezahl," incidental music to "König Ingurd," "Heinrich IV," "Der Leuchthurm," the cantatas "Natur und Liebe," the hymn "In seiner Ordnung schaff der Herr" with orchestra, two masses, four scenas for sop. with orchestra; two scenas for ten. with chorus and orchestra; 19 part-songs, six canons, two clarinet concertos, a bassoon concerto, adagio and rondo ungarese for bassoon and orchestra, the "Invitation to the Dance" ("Auf-forderung zum Tanze"), Op. 65; 10 sonatas, Concertstück with orchestra, 6 Écossaises, 12 Allemands, sets of variations, a Jubel-overture and 18 "Valse favorites de l'imperatrice de France." Wiggins ("Blind Tom") was a blind negro idiot who possessed a faculty of imitating performances on the piano so remarkable as to have caused all sorts of exaggerated accounts of his skill to be readily received by non-musical people. It was said, for example, that his repertoire included "sonatas of Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Bach," and that he had played the "Sonata Pathétique" without the omission of a single note, while he was accredited with the composition of "The Rain Storm" and "The Battle of Manassas," both descriptive pieces. "Blind Tom" was exhibited and played in public for about forty years, earning a sum estimated at $200,000, which may easily have been more. That a blind and idiotic negro should have been able to play the piano at all is sufficiently remarkable, and it should be said once and for all that he was utterly incapable of performing any classic sonata, or any masterpiece in any style in its entirety, although he might have "executed" or "rendered" or "butchered" such fragments as remained in his memory, and, that the two descriptive pieces named were wholly unworthy of serious consideration as music. He was able, however, to distinguish any note struck on the piano, and to repeat, within his limitations, any simple music which might be played for him. Son of slaves on the plantation of Thomas Greene Bethune, near Columbus, Ga., he was allowed access to the piano from his fourth year, and was coached from time to time by professional musicians. He loved the applause of the audiences before which he appeared, and always clapped his hands himself, grinning and bowing as he did so. The next act takes place in the Lugano villa. Zampa is tracked there by the authorities, but shows a pardon for himself and crew, based on his promise to aid in the war against the Turks. Camilla at last agrees to marry the corsair, in order to save her father, and again the statue is seen to move in warning. Gotlieb, sop.; Papagena, Frau Gori; Three Fairies. Both composer and librettist were members of the Masonic fraternity, and Masonic symbolism abounds throughout the work, which has retained its popularity until the present time, despite manifest absurdities of plot. The action is laid in Egypt. Tamino is rescued from the toils of a serpent by the fairies belonging to the Queen of Night. Pamina, daughter of the Queen of Night is being brought up by Sarastro, High Priest of Isis, who hopes in this way to circumvent As-triflammante's power for evil. The Queen, meeting Tamino, plans to obtain possession of her daughter through him and gives him a magic flute to aid him in the conflict with Sarastro which she foresees. Papageno and Papagena, who provide the low comedy of the opera, discuss the power of Sarastro and the priests in a dialogue, and finally Papageno, who receives a set of magic bells, starts off with Tamino for Sarastro's temple. Papageno is first to arrive and frightens away Monostatos, who had been annoying Pamina. The bird catcher then attempts to rescue Pamina, but they are captured, Tamino is himself caught, and all are brought before Sarastro for judgment. The wise Sarastro orders Monostatos a whipping, and agrees that if they will pass through a noviciate, Tamino shall have Pamina, whom he already loves, for his wife, and Papageno shall be united to Papagena. The Queen of Night reveals herself to Pamina in a vision, and attempts to dissuade her from carrying out the programme arranged by the High Priest but in vain. The second act opens with an invocation to Isis and Osiris, sung by Sarastro and his attendant priests. Tamino and Papageno are brought in and instructed as to the ordeals to which they will soon be subjected. The three fairies make a last effort to win them from their purpose, and they pass through the various temptations and purifications, at last being brought triumphantly before the altar to receive their reward. Unable to regain possession of her daughter by fair means or foul, the Queen of Night now plots with Monostatos to murder Sarastro. But the dawn breaks and with it the power of the Queen of Night ends, and as the full sunlight pours in upon the High Priest, the evil spirits vanish and the happy lovers unite with priests and people in reverent thanksgiving. The principal musical num-

ELEKTRA. Richard Strauss' opera, to book by Hofmannthal, was first performed Jan. 25, 1909, at the Royal Opera House, Dresden, under the supervision of the composer, Chapelmaster E. von Schuch conducting, the orchestra being augmented to a total of 110 musicians. The cast was: Elektra, Annie Krull, sop.; Krysosthemis, Margarethe Siems, sop.; Klytemnestra, Schumann-Heink, con.; five maids in the household of Klytemnestra; Orestes, Carl Perron, bar.; Aegisthus, Johannes Sembach, ten. The action is laid, of course, in ancient Greece, but while the book is based on the tragedy of Sophocles, the characters seem actuated by primitive passions instead of being merely puppets in the hands of the Olympian gods. Agamemnon, father of Elektra, Krysosthemis, and Orestes, has been murdered by his wife, Klytemnestra, and her lover, Aegisthus. Believing that if her young son is permitted to arrive at manhood he will avenge his father's murder by killing her, Klytemnestra then plans the destruction of Orestes, but the lad is saved by a pilgrim, who steals him away from the palace, and conveys him into hiding. Orestes, as his mother has foreseen, grows up with the sole idea of avenging his father. Elektra, too, lives for this one purpose. Klytemnestra treats her as a slave, compelling her to eat with the dogs. Krysosthemis, on the other hand, accepts the conditions in which she finds herself. What she desires above all else is a husband and children. But it is Elektra who is consulted by Klytemnestra when tortured by evil dreams. She feels that the gods must be appeased for the crime she has committed, and asks Elektra what victim must be sacrificed to placate their wrath. "The blood of a certain person must flow," Elektra declares, meaning her mother, "and then the dreams will cease." Orestes is reported to have been killed by his horse. Elektra then resolves to avenge Aga-memnon herself. To her longing for revenge is added the need of self-preservation, for Krysosthemis tells her that Klytemnestra and Aegisthus plan her death. The news of Orestes' death is false — meant by Klytemnestra to throw Elektra off her guard. Orestes finds Elektra, but she does not know him until he proves his identity by means of a ring. Then she is overjoyed, digs up the hatchet with which Agamemnon was slain, gives it to Orestes, and almost forces him to enter the castle in which the guilty pair are asleep. A moment later a horrible shriek announces the death of Klytemnestra, and Aegisthus runs from the castle in terror. He too is stricken down. Elektra, whose whole aim in life has been thus accomplished, dances in mad exultation until she falls dead.

PIPE OF DESIRE. Frederick S. Converse's one-act romantic grand opera, to book by George Edward Barton, was first performed in Jordan Hall, Boston, Jan. 31, 1906, accepted by Gatti-Casazza for the Metropolitan Opera House, promised for the season of 1908-9, and again for the season of 1909-10. The characters are: Iolan, a peasant, ten.; Naoia, his betrothed, mez. sop.; the Old One, keeper of the Pipe, bar.; first Sylph, sop.; first Undine, con.; first Salamander, ten.; first Gnome, bar.; chorus of sylphs, sop.; undines; con.; salamanders, ten.; and gnomes, bassi. The action takes place in a mountain glade. The foreground is open and brilliant. It is Spring, and the flowers are budding. In the background a forest, dark, mysterious, and closed by a mass of rocks, with an opening in the centre. This leads to the valley below, a glimpse of which can be seen to the right. To the left, a large flat rock. A mossy bank to the left centre serves as a couch and seat. The elfin chorus sings a joyous hymn: "Every year, our work completed, nearer brings the Peace of God." Iolan is approaching. The Gnome would roll down rocks upon him, but the Undine declares Iolan has ever been kind to the elves, and the Sylph suggests that a gift were better. Then the Gnome offers a jewel, and the elves resolve to show their friendship by dancing around the kindly mortal. "It is madness," the Old One tells them, "it is forbidden by ancient laws to show themselves to man," but the elves declare nought is forbidden on this first day of Spring, and that they but call Iolan to requite his kindness. As Iolan enters the elves hide behind trees, and hearing them call his name, he fancies he must be dreaming. He responds cordially to the professions of good will made by the elves, who dance about him; then showing a purse, he tells them he has earned this money to buy his farm, that he will wed Naoia to-morrow, and invites them all to the feast. Iolan cannot understand why the Old One should be gloomy on the gladdest day of Spring. The elves tell him this is the mightiest of them all. Iolan thinks they are mocking him, for he sees neither crown nor sceptre nor purse of gold. "Ten thousand years of life my crown," replies the Old One, "the earth my purse of gold, this Pipe which hangs about my neck the sceptre of the world." The elves demand their yearly privilege—the Old One must pipe for them while they dance. Vainly does the Old One protest. They are mad! He will not play while Iolan is present. The elves insist. They are within their rights. The Old One plays, and the elves dance merrily to the music. But Iolan is not impressed. Another Pipe would have served as well, he thinks. No power in Earth or Heaven could make him dance, or wish to dance, save with his bride. The elves determine he shall feel the power of the Pipe, and they compel the Old One to play again. Despite himself, Iolan begins to dance. The elves laugh at him. In revenge he snatches the Pipe from the Old One. The elves cry out in terror and are silent. They promise him power, gold, or wine, but warn him not to blow the Pipe, for it is a sacred thing, "It is the Pipe," the Old One tells him, "God gave to Lilith, and she played to man in Eden, but its charm was rent by woman. Now we play its potent music that those in solitude may hear, and continue restless, wandering, searching ever." But Iolan is not impressed, and when the Old One pronounces a curse upon the mortal who dares play the Pipe, his answer is to blow a harsh discordant note. The elves rush to the forest, crying out in terror. The scene grows dark, but lightens as he sounds the Pipe again. A prophetic vision rises before Iolan, who drops the Pipe. He sees the picture of his utmost wish,— a farm lying in a peaceful valley, the smoke rising from his hearth, his children playing before his door, Naoia coming to meet him. "Naoia," he cries, "do you not hear me call? Leave all! Leave all and come to me." "The Pipe but played the note of your desire," the Old One says, and regaining possession of the Pipe, he plays it, and disappears. Again the vision, this time, the present, not the future. Iolan sees his beloved lying upon her bed, where her mother kneels in prayer. Naoia rises in obedience to his command, and runs toward him with naked feet. Vainly he begs her to stop. She no longer hears his voice, but rushes on. Her feet bleed. She falls and cuts her head on a stone. Thorns tear her robe, but still she runs, dashing through the icy stream, scaling the rock, then joins her lover, trembling and exhausted: "Across the world I heard you call, beloved, I have come!" Tenderly, lovingly they greet each other, but the spell of Lilith's Pipe is on the girl. Dazed, she dreamily murmurs her version of the vision which Iolan had seen, but the curse is being fulfilled. From the ecstasy of love she passes into the silence of death. The elves return from the forest as Iolan mourns his loss, and in despair, casts from him the gold which was to have bought a home for his bride. "There is no God," he cries, "and I am all alone." "There is a God," rejoins the Old One, "whose laws unchanging no man may hope to disobey. Upon His Pipe you blew your one desire, forced your own will upon the ordained way. Man has his will, man pays the penalty." At this Iolan rushes on the Old One with upraised staff. "Strike, if you think her soul demands revenge," says the Old One, and Iolan drops his staff. The elves who had brought misery, hoping to bring him joy, now ask that the old song of Autumn be played, that Iolan may see the way all things must wither. Again the Pipe sounds, the season seems to change, and Iolan is soothed to slumber as the leaves fall softly from the trees, dead before dropping, like his old desires. Falling on Naoia's body, he dies. The light fades away, and the elves sing, "Nothing is wasted, nothing is wasted," as the curtain falls.

POIA. Arthur Nevin's three-act grand opera, to book by Randolph Hartley, was first performed in concert form in Pittsburgh, Jan. 16, 1907, and accepted for the Berlin Opera House, 1909. The characters are: Poia, an Indian Brave, ten.; Natoya, a chief's daughter, sop.; Nenahu, a Medicine Woman, con.; Sumatsi, a wicked warrior, bar.; Natosi, God of the Sun, bass; Episua, the Morning Star, mez. sop. Act I: The rising curtain reveals the tribal camp of the Blackfeet Indians at a time prior to the white man's coming. In the distance the Rocky Mountains. Poia ("scar-faced"), so called because of the birthmark which disfigures him, symbolic of his father's sins, and distinguishing him as the scapegoat of his people, loves Natoya, a chief's daughter. The maiden scorns him, and loves the handsome but wicked warrior, Sumatsi. To rid herself of an unwelcome suitor, she tells Poia that she will wed him if he can free himself from the scar. Poia consults Nenahu, the Medicine Woman, who advises him to win the favor of the Sun God, who alone can remove this blemish. Sumatsi brings gifts to Natoya, which she accepts, although Nenahu pleads with the warrior to let the girl alone, as only evil can result from their love. Poia departs, a pilgrim in honour of the god. Act II: Poia is seen in the midst of a dense forest. He appeals to Natosi, the Sun God, who reveals himself to the suppliant mortal, but scorns his prayer. Episua (the Morning Star) is attacked by eagles. Poia drives off these birds of prey, and the Sun God is thus moved to grant his petition. As he sinks into a profound sleep, Mola, Nepu, Moku, and Stuyi (the Four Seasons) dance about him with their attendants, and grant him radiant beauty. Natosi then invites Poia to dwell among the gods, and is enraged at his refusal, but softens when the young brave tells of his love for Natoya. In the end, Poia is sent back to his tribe, under the guidance of Episia, bearing with him as a gift from Natosi a wonderful robe which can be worn only by a pure woman. Wolf Trail (the Milky Way) also gives the young warrior a magic flute, and teaches him a song which shall command woman's love. Act III: Poia returns to the Blackfeet camp. Misfortunes have fallen upon the Indians in Poia's absence, and the people blame Natoya, whose infatuation for Sumatsi drove Poia away. During an impassioned love scene between Sumatsi and Natoya, Poia's magic song is heard in the distance. Natoya instantly loves the singer, and hates Sumatsi. Poia is welcomed as the Sun God's messenger and the prophet of his people. Natoya, though she loves him, fears the garment he has brought her, for she is no longer pure. In jealous rage Sumatsi tries to kill Poia, but Natoya throws herself between the young men, and receives a mortal wound from the hand of her former lover. Sumatsi is slain by a ray from the Sun God. Then Poia, raising the dying girl in his arms, while the people kneel in awe and reverence, invests her form with the holy robe, declaring that her sacrifice has restored her purity, and is wafted with his bride to the realms of the Sun God.

REGER (MAX) composed a symphony, Op. 90, orchestral variations, more than 200 songs, piano sonatas, and sonatas for violin and piano, 'cello, and piano, string quartets, many works for piano and sonatas, fugues, and preludes for organ; wrote on theory; taught harmony, counterpoint, and organ at the Munich Conservatory, and from 1908, composition and instrumentation at the Leipsic Conservatory. Son of a schoolmaster, who, with the organist Lindner, gave him his earliest instruction in music, Reger studied with Riemann at Sondershausen and Wiesbaden, and in the latter city taught in the conservatory, 1895-96. Returning home, he was attacked with a long and severe illness, but in 1901, having entirely recovered his health, he settled in Munich, where, in addition to his teaching, he found time to conduct the Porges' singing society, and give proof of prolific inventiveness. Reger is said by German critics to be a profound theorist, original, but complex in style, and in his striving after freedom from the conventions of his art to rather outdo Strauss. However that may be, he had a larger number of published works to his credit in 1909 than almost any of the younger generation of German composers, those published and bearing opus numbers having exceeded 104 in 1909, while a mass of compositions lacked this form of classification. Reger has thus far avoided works for the voice in the larger forms, but in the production of variations and fugues he has already been more fertile than Brahms. He has been honoured with the title "Royal Professor," and made musical director of Leipsic University. B. Mar. 19, 1873, Brand, near Kemnath, Bavaria; add. Leipsic.

SBRIGLIA (GIOVANNI) sang ten. in opera, then settled in Paris as a teacher, where his pupils included Nordica and the De Reszkes. B. 1840, Naples; add. Paris.

SUBSIDIZED THEATRES. Add: The experiment of conducting the Gaité Theatre, Paris, as a popular priced opera house proved a complete success, from the financial as well as the artistic point of view.

TESS. Baron Frederick d'Erlanger's opera to book by Luigi Illica, Eng. version by Claude Avering, based on Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the d'Urbervilles," was first performed April 10, 1906, at the San Carlos, Naples, under the direction of Signor Panizza. In 1909 it had three successful representations at Covent Garden, London, where it was the principal novelty of the season. The title rôle was sung by Emmy Destinn. The story of the opera ends in the bridal chamber of Tess, where the confession to Angell Clare is made, and, after his refusal to forgive in the song "My Soul Rebels, It Cannot Pardon," the action is brought to a close by the suicide of Tess.

TOSCA. Giacomo Puccini's three-act opera to book by Giacosa and Illica, based on Sardou's play, was first performed at the Costanzi Theatre, Rome, Jan., 1900, and has since become an established favorite in all parts of the world. At the first New York performance, Metropolitan Opera House, Feb. 4, 1901, the cast was: Floria Tosca, Ternina, sop.; Mario Cavarodossi, Cremonini, ten.; Cesar Angelotti, Dufriche, bar.; Il Sagrestano, Gilibert, bar.; Spoletta, Bars, bar.; Scianone, Viviani, ten.; Scarpia, Scotti, bar. Cavarodossi is copying a painting in the Church of St. Andrea, Rome, when Angelotti, a political prisoner who has escaped, rushes in to implore his aid. Cavarodossi gives him a woman's dress in which to disguise himself, and hurries him into concealment as Floria Tosca enters. She is jealous, and a fan dropped by Angelotti confirms her suspicion that her lover has been entertaining a woman visitor. The church fills with dignitaries who are to assist at a mass in celebration of a victory over Napoleon, and among the newcomers are Scarpia, Minister of Police, and his spies, bent on tracking Angelotti to his hiding place. Scarpia, inflamed by Tosca's beauty, works on her suspicions with the view of ensnaring Angelotti and ruining Cavarodossi at the same time. A buffo element is introduced in this act by the pranks of the choir and altar boys, who tease the Sacristan. Act II: Cavarodossi having been placed under arrest in Tosca's home, Scarpia, who is at supper, orders him put to torture, but without forcing him to reveal the whereabouts of Angelotti. Finally Scarpia does learn the place of Angelotti's concealment from Tosca, but the unfortunate man saves himself from capture by committing suicide. Scarpia now presses his love on Tosca, and when she spurns him, causes Cavarodossi to be tortured in an adjoining room. Unable to endure the agonized shrieks of her lover, Tosca obtains a suspension of the torture by professing a willingness to yield, but when Cavarodossi is brought in, he declares that he will die under torment rather than agree to such infamy. Again he is removed, and the torture applied. Driven to the point of madness by her lover's plight, Tosca agrees to the compact. She will give herself to Scarpia if he will connive at her lover's escape, and give them a safe conduct out of Rome the following morning. Scarpia tells her that the execution of Cavarodossi must seem to take place, but that the soldiers in the firing squad shall have blank cartridges only. Tosca has secreted a knife, picked up from the supper table, and when Scarpia has given the orders which she believes will free her lover and herself next day, and has signed the passports, she stabs him to death. Overcome by religious emotion, she places candles about the dead man, and lays a crucifix on his breast. Act III: Cavarodossi appears on a platform of the Castle of St. Angelo, where he is to die at dawn. Tosca comes to tell him that they are yet to be happy, that she has slain Scarpia, and that, after a mock execution in which he must pretend to die, they will leave Rome forever. A touching love scene is interrupted by the arrival of a firing squad. Cavarodossi submits to being blindfolded, and takes his place against the wall. A moment later the soldiers fire a volley, Cavarodossi springs into the air, falls to the floor of the platform, the officer in command draws a cloth over his form, and departs with his men. Tosca finds that the execution has been real, and her lover is dead. Meantime the death of Scarpia has been discovered. Knowing their master to have been killed by Tosca, Scarpia's guards come to the platform in search of her, but she eludes them by plunging to her death in the Tiber. The orchestration of this opera is Wagnerian in its use of the leit motif, and of great dramatic intensity. In place of an overture three chords in the bass sound the Scarpia motif. Chimes, cannon, and an organ are used to supplement the usual array of instruments. The principal musical numbers are: Act I: "Recondita armonia," Cavarodossi; "Non la sospire," Tosca and Cavarodossi.

dossi; "Va Tosca, nel tuo cuor s'an-nida Scarpia." Act II: "vissi d'arte e d'amor, no feci," Tosca. Act III: "E lecevan le stelle," Cavadossi; "O dolci mani," Tosca and Cavarodossi.
